CLASS ACTION COMPLAINT

The Plaintiffs, Kandice Raven, Jane Gallentine, Taliyah Murphy, Amber Miller, Megan Gulley, Lavinya Karpierz, and Cupcake Rivers, as representatives of themselves and all others similarly situated, by and through their attorneys, Paula Greisen, Jessica Freeman, Lynly S. Egyes, Shawn Thomas Meerkamper, Dale Melchert, allege the following in this Class Action:

THE NATURE OF THE CASE

1. Plaintiffs bring this class action on behalf of themselves and all transgender women who are, have been, or will be confined at the Colorado Department of Corrections (hereinafter referred to as “CDOC”), including but not limited to the all the facilities maintained, operated, or controlled by the CDOC and who have been, are or will be discriminated against solely on the basis of their status as women who are transgender in receiving the rights and privileges accorded to other people in CDOC custody.

2. Plaintiffs are seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, as well as compensatory damages, pursuant to the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act, C.R.S. §§ 24-34-601, et seq., and the Colorado Constitution Art. II, §§ 29 and 20. Plaintiffs are also requesting an award of costs and attorneys’ fees under these statutes and the Colorado Constitution.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

3. The jurisdiction of this Court arises under the Colorado Constitution and C.R.S. §§ 24-34-601, et seq. All procedural and administrative prerequisites and exhaustion requirements for filing this suit have been met. There are no other administrative exhaustion requirements that would pose as a bar to any of the claims in this case.

4. All of the events alleged herein occurred and are continuing to occur within the State of Colorado, and all of the parties are residents of the State. Venue is proper in this Court pursuant to C.R.S. § 24-4-106.

PARTIES

5. This is a class action on behalf of all transgender women in the custody of the Colorado Department of Corrections. Class Representatives are class members Kandice Raven, Jane Gallentine, Taliyah Murphy, Amber Miller, Megan Gulley, Lavinya Karpierz, and Cupcake Rivers,¹ all of whom are adult citizens and residents of Colorado. They are representatives of the class of transgender women and transgender women with gender dysphoria.

6. Kandice Raven is a 30-year-old transgender woman who is currently incarcerated at the CDOC male correctional facility in Sterling, Colorado. Because she is a transgender woman in CDOC custody, she has been subjected to numerous brutal assaults, resulting in permanent injuries, including a rape in 2014. She has attempted suicide twice and attempted self-castration as a means to deal with her severe gender dysphoria. Her numerous requests for transition-related surgery have been denied by CDOC.

7. Jane Gallentine is a transgender woman and survivor of childhood sexual abuse as well as conversion therapy—a dangerous and now illegal practice that seeks to convince people that they are not transgender or gay. She has been incarcerated since 2010 after attempting “suicide by cop.” Currently incarcerated at the CDOC male correctional facility in Sterling, Colorado, Jane has survived several rapes while in CDOC’s care. One of her abusers forcibly tattooed his name on her neck to show everyone that she was “his property;” another was a corrections officer who repeatedly raped her despite Jane’s pleas to his superiors. Jane lives in a constant state of severe anxiety and depression due to lack of medical treatment, lack of mental health treatment, and a persistent fear of sexual assault and a violent death.

8. Taliyah Murphy is a transgender women who grew up in a military family in Colorado Springs and knew she was a girl around age nine. Taliyah has been incarcerated since 2009, after a conviction resulting from an altercation with her abusive boyfriend. Despite the severe depression her gender dysphoria causes, Taliyah is a mentor to other transgender women in CDOC and has prepared multiple articles and presentations on what it means to be transgender. Taliyah has repeatedly requested accommodations for her gender dysphoria, including transition-related surgery several times, to be searched by female staff, and to be transferred to a women's prison. She has been repeatedly denied, despite even a recent recommendation for transition-related surgery from a CDOC psychologist called Dr. Thiele. Taliyah is currently housed in a male CDOC facility.

9. Amber Miller is a 32-year-old transgender woman currently incarcerated at the male facility in Buena Vista. While in CDOC's care, she has survived rapes by a male corrections officer as well as incarcerated men. Because she filed a PREA report, Amber was stripped naked by a group of male guards, handcuffed, and placed in the hole for weeks. Amber has not been able to obtain treatment for the trauma she has suffered in CDOC, and has faced unreasonable obstacles to accessing her medication, sometimes causing sudden drops in her hormone levels and corresponding suicidal ideation and self-harm. She is routinely misgendered and subjected to strip searches by male corrections officers and has been repeatedly punished for seeking safer housing assignments.

10. Megan Gulley is a transgender woman from the Denver area who knew she was a girl from an early age. She has been incarcerated by CDOC in its male correctional facilities since 2002. She was later diagnosed with gender dysphoria and has been on hormone replacement therapy since 2014. Now housed in the Fremont male facility, Megan has been raped numerous times while in CDOC custody and has been repeatedly threatened by gang members for sex. Megan has made numerous requests for transfer to a women's prison and for transition-related surgery which have been denied—despite the severity of her gender dysphoria having led to multiple attempts at self-castration.

11. Lavinya Karpierz is a transgender woman who has been in CDOC male correctional facilities since 1998 and started hormone replacement therapy since 2016. Lavinya continues to suffer from severe depression related to her GD and has lived in constant fear of being raped in the male facilities. She fought off an attempted rape in Fremont in 2015 and was placed in solitary for fighting off her attacker. Lavinya has filed numerous requests for transition-related surgery, all of which have been denied. After years of requesting transfer to a women's prison, Lavinya was moved to Denver Women's Correctional Facility in late October 2019.

12. Cupcake Rivers is a 42-year-old transgender woman and has been incarcerated in CDOC male correctional facilities since 1999. Cupcake came out as transgender in 2004 and has been on hormone replacement therapy since 2015. Cupcake lives in fear of being raped in the male facilities and is often subjected to constant, severe and vulgar sexual harassment by incarcerated men, and she continues to suffer from depression and anxiety and loses sleep worrying for her safety. Her numerous requests for surgical treatment for her gender dysphoria have been denied, and she longs for competent talk therapy related to her gender dysphoria.

CLASS ACTION ALLEGATIONS

22. This action is brought as a class action on behalf of transgender women as similarly situated persons pursuant to the provisions of Rules 23(b)(1)(A), 23(b)(1)(B), 23(b)(2), and 23(b)(3) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

23. The class consists of all transgender women who are or will be confined at the Colorado Department of Corrections.

24. Subclass A consists of class members who have gender dysphoria, which is the clinical diagnosis for the distress that many transgender people experience because of the incongruence between gender identity and sex assigned at birth. The symptoms of gender dysphoria cause a disability that substantially limits major life activities including working, socializing, education, and reproduction. CDOC limits access to its programs, services and benefits based on this disability.

25. All the class representatives have standing to bring this class action because they are transgender women who are currently incarcerated in the CDOC and include those class members who have gender dysphoria.

26. The class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. On information and belief, there are at least 160 transgender women who CDOC incarcerates in men's prisons. The incarcerated populations at the CDOC facilities change constantly and therefore not all class members can be specifically identified.

27. There are questions of law and fact that relate to and affect the rights of each member of the class. All class members have been, are, or will be confined at a CDOC facility, and all have been, are, or will be discriminated against solely on the basis of their status as transgender women in receiving the rights and privileges accorded to other incarcerated people.

28. The class representatives are typical of the claims of the class in that:

A. The class representatives have been subjected to conditions at the CDOC facilities which create imminent risks of serious mental and physical injury for transgender women;

B. Class representatives have been subjected to discrimination while in the custody of CDOC solely on the basis of their gender identity and/or their disability, in that they have been denied appropriate housing, have been subjected to cross-gender searches by male guards, including strip searches, have been subjected to conditions that pose serious risk to their safety and well-being, and have been subjected to conditions that expose them to harassment, rape, sexual assault, and other violence based on their sex, transgender status and/or disability;

C. Class representatives are discriminated against based on their sex, transgender status and/or disability in that they are denied living conditions and other necessary accommodations that recognize their appropriate gender identity, including the use of proper pronouns and identification that comports with their gender identity, proper bathing areas that respect privacy issues, and full access to gender-appropriate canteen items;

D. Class representatives have been discriminated against based on their sex, transgender status and/or disability and denied appropriate accommodations for their disability in that they have been denied medical and mental health treatment by qualified medical and mental health providers, including medically necessary surgical treatment for gender dysphoria;

E. Class members are discriminated against by being denied full access to rehabilitation programs to facilitate the transition of class members to living conditions upon their release from custody, and

F. The class representatives, like all class members, are discriminated against in that they have been routinely denied access to other programs, services, and benefits provided by the CDOC and the individual correctional facilities solely on the basis of their sex, transgender status and/or disability.

29. The class representatives and their attorneys will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. These class representatives are suitable class representative because their claims are typical of the class claims, and their confinement is expected to continue through the duration of this action. The attorneys representing the class are capable and experienced in litigation involving discrimination and civil rights claims. The class representatives and their attorneys intend to prosecute this class action vigorously.

30. This action is properly maintained as a class action in accordance with Rule 23(b)(1)(A) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure in that the prosecution of separate actions by individual members of the class would create a risk of inconsistent or varying adjudications which would establish incompatible standards for the defendants, or would create disparate conditions of confinement for persons with disabilities among the several Colorado Department of Corrections facilities.

31. This action is properly maintained as a class action in accordance with Rule 23(b)(1)(B) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure in that the prosecution of separate actions by individual members of the class would create a risk of adjudications, which would, as a practical matter, be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the adjudications, or substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests. It is not feasible to provide the required access to programs, services, or benefits of the CDOC in piecemeal fashion.

32. This action is properly maintained as a class action in accordance with Rules 23(b)2 and (b)(3) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure in that the defendants have acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to all transgender women in the custody of the CDOC, thereby making final declaratory and injunctive relief appropriate for the class as a whole.

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

Gender Identity, Gender Dysphoria, and the Incarceration of Transgender Women

33. Gender identity is an innate, internal sense of one's sex—e.g., being male or female—and is a basic part of every person's core identity. Everyone has a gender identity. Most people's gender identity is consistent with the sex they were assigned at birth ("assigned sex"). Transgender people, however, have a gender identity that is different from their assigned sex. For example, a transgender woman is a woman who was assigned male at birth and has a female gender identity. A cisgender woman is a woman who was assigned female at birth and has a female gender identity.

34. The American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (5th ed. 2013) ("DSM-5") recognizes that being transgender is not itself a disability, but that the clinically-relevant condition is the "gender dysphoria" ("GD") experienced by many individuals whose gender identity conflicts with their assigned sex. GD is defined as the significant distress that may accompany the incongruence between a transgender person's gender identity and assigned sex. This distress limits major life activities and is therefore a disability. A transgender person's gender dysphoria can be alleviated when the person is able to live, and be treated by others, consistently with the person's gender identity.

35. Gender dysphoria often, but not always, emerges during childhood. Most, if not all of the class members have known they were female since childhood. For instance, at the age of three, Megan Gulley wanted to be "the mom" while playing house with other children. Taliyah Murphy knew she was different by age nine and began presenting in girls' clothes and makeup.

36. When a transgender person's gender dysphoria is left untreated, or is inadequately treated, the consequences can be dire. Symptoms of untreated gender dysphoria often include intense emotional suffering, anxiety and depression, suicidality, and thoughts or acts of self-harm. All of those symptoms can be mitigated, and often prevented altogether, for transgender people with access to appropriate individualized medical care as part of their gender transitions.

37. Many of the class members have engaged in multiple acts of self-harm, some since childhood, because their gender dysphoria is not accommodated. For instance, Jane Gallentine first attempted suicide around age seven. Kandice Raven's insufficiently treated gender dysphoria causes serious depression and constant thoughts of attempting self-castration. Megan Gulley has attempted self-castration multiple times, and Amber Miller engages in self-harm "cutting" regularly.

38. Certain medical treatments, including hormone replacement therapy and various surgical procedures that align one's physical characteristics with one's gender identity (collectively referred to in this Complaint as "transition-related surgeries" or "surgical treatment for gender dysphoria") are safe and medically effective treatments for gender dysphoria under the applicable standards of care, and are recognized as such by the medical profession.

39. The prison environment can be particularly harmful to transgender women, as reports (including the 2009 report by the National Prison Rape Elimination Commission) consistently document that transgender women are victims of sexual abuse at much higher rates than the rest of the population while in custodial environments including lock-ups, jails and prisons, as well as while being searched by male prison guards.

40. Many, but not all, of the women in this class action receive hormone replacement therapy ("HRT"). HRT changes the hormonal levels so that these women can develop feminine features in accordance with their gender identity, and results in the development of breasts and other physical characteristics that are stereotypically associated with a feminine appearance. The vast majority of class members also make substantial efforts to present as the women that they are to alleviate the symptoms of gender dysphoria—for example, by grooming their hair and wearing makeup to express their female identity.

41. As women living in men's prisons, class members are routinely subjected to sexual harassment and often, to sexual violence. Class members are targeted by incarcerated men and male CDOC staff for sexual encounters and are often treated as chattel – traded for favors in the prison environments and subjected to sex trafficking, especially by gang members who seek to control them as their property. Some transgender women in CDOC’s prisons have even had gang symbols forcibly tattooed on their bodies, labelling them as the property of certain gangs – and then forced to provide sexual favors to those gang members.

42. In its June 2015 report of data collection activities, the Bureau of Justice Statistics (“BJS”) disclosed that an estimated 35% of transgender people held in prisons such as those in Colorado reported experiencing one or more incidents of sexual victimization in the past 12 months or since admission.

43. According to the BJS report, when asked about the experiences surrounding their victimization by other incarcerated people, 72% of the transgender respondents said they experienced force or threat of force and 29% said they were physically injured.

44. In 2017, at the male facility located in Buena Vista, Amber Miller was thrown to the ground, pinned down, and brutally raped by a male inmate. In hopes of finding safe shelter from her attacker, she filed a Prison Rape Elimination Act (“PREA”) report shortly thereafter on February 5, 2017. In response, male CDOC staff stripped her naked, handcuffed her, searched her, and put her in solitary confinement. While in “the hole,” Amber was told that she would need to be examined by a male physician to complete her report under PREA. Knowing that such an examination would require her to expose herself in front of male guards, she could not endure the process and refused the examination. Afterward, she was simply told that her claim was unsubstantiated.

45. Soon thereafter, CDOC assigned Amber and her rapist to the same yard. When her pleas to be moved went unanswered, Amber’s only option was to violate prison rules which she knew would result in her being moved to a different unit for disciplinary reasons. Eventually, she was transferred to Arkansas Valley, where she was raped again, this time by a CDOC corrections officer who demanded oral sex from her and told her if she refused he would falsely report that she’d attacked him, saying, “nobody will believe you.” Feeling helpless, Amber performed oral sex on the guard, after which he turned her around and raped her anally. Amber again filed a PREA report, but fearing retaliation and recalling her treatment after her prior PREA report, she did not complete her complaint.

46. Jane Gallentine has survived rape and sexual assault in CDOC custody many times. While incarcerated at Buena Vista, her cellmate would strangle her until she would give in to oral sex. Having already learned that CDOC rape investigations were unhelpful, and fearing death for being labeled a “snitch,” Jane never reported. While incarcerated at Limon, a man named Eric claimed her as his “property.” He raped her on a regular basis, repeatedly threatened to kill her if she reported him, and tattooed his name on her neck so everyone else would know she “belonged to” him.

47. While incarcerated at Sterling, Jane was trafficked by a CDOC employee, Officer Lewis. After she arrived at that facility, Officer Lewis started demanding that he always be the one to escort her in the facility and waited for her after lunch. He would stare at her in a sexually suggestive manner. She filed a PREA report for this, hoping to be separated from Officer Lewis. Emboldened by the lack of response to Jane's complaints about him, Officer Lewis began taking Jane to secluded areas and started groping her breasts, ultimately raping her, which he would continue to do on multiple occasions. Jane begged for help, from a Lieutenant Embrick and a Captain McIntosh, but nothing was done. Jane made numerous reports about Officer Lewis, including that he was touching and kissing her, that he left marks on her breasts and neck, and that he raped her on numerous occasions. Finally, an investigator was assigned, and Jane showed him the physical evidence of her bruises and hickies, and a SANE exam was performed. Although Jane was told that DNA evidence was retrieved during the SANE exam, Embrick later told her that the DNA test "disappeared." As a result of filing the PREA report, Jane was placed in the hole for two weeks. Although the investigator, Lieutenant Pimple, told Jane he would return to discuss the investigation with her, she never saw him again, and she never saw the results of the alleged PREA investigation.

48. Kandice Raven was beaten and raped when she was first incarcerated in the MCC unit in Sterling. During that assault her attacker strangled her with a cable cord. Although she made a formal PREA report regarding the assault, CDOC claims it does not have a record of that report. In 2017, Kandice was brutally beaten by Sureño gang members at Buena Vista. The gang members knocked out her tooth, deviated her septum, and caused her eye to swell shut. Instead of being provided immediate medical attention, she was placed in solitary confinement for two weeks. As a result in the delay of treatment for the attack, her gum line is permanently damaged. In March 2019, Kandice was again beaten by three Sureño gang members in the MCC unit at Sterling. These gang members told her to leave the unit saying they did not want "fairies" living in their unit. After surviving such repeated violence, Kandice suffers from PTSD and is afraid to leave her cell. She has grieved her placement and asked to be moved to safe housing, and to the female living facility, but CDOC responded, as it always does, that housing assignments are "not a grievable issue."

49. Before being transferred last month to a female correctional facility, Lavinya Karpierz was constantly being groped by men in the male CDOC Buena Vista facility. At that facility, there were times when she could only shower at a time and place where she was exposed to incarcerated men who would leer, make harassing comments, solicit sex, and on at least one occasion, expose themselves to her. Lavinya lived in constant fear of rape while in men's prisons.

50. Like the other women, Cupcake Rivers has also lived in daily fear of being sexually harassed or raped. For an extended period, Cupcake was subjected to male inmate's watching her during her shower times, shouting at her comments like "suck my dick, bitch!" and "Man, I'd like to fuck that!" Despite her complaints, CDOC refused to take corrective action.

51. Megan Gulley has been raped multiple times since she's been in CDOC's care. She was raped when she was first incarcerated at Buena Vista in 2002. Megan did not report the rapes because CDOC staff at that time had a practice of telling people that reporting rapes would only make their situations worse. In August 2019, Megan refused a work assignment in the kitchen at Fremont because she had been raped in that very kitchen previously. Rather than work with a rape survivor to mitigate her trauma, CDOC staff put her on restricted privileges. At Sterling in 2016 and 2017, Megan was extorted by gang members who threatened to either kill her or make her a sex slave unless she paid them money. In order to protect Megan and having their pleas to CDOC to protect Megan go unanswered, Megan's family gave some compensation to the gang members to stop the threats.

Relevant Standards for Incarcerated Transgender People.

52. The World Professional Association for Transgender Health (WPATH) is the leading professional association for surgeons, doctors, medical researchers and others who specialize in the medical treatment of people with gender dysphoria. Based on decades of clinical experience, WPATH has promulgated medical standards of care for treating patients with gender dysphoria, the Standards of Care for the Health of Transsexual, Transgender, and Gender-Nonconforming People. CDOC, and all Defendants entrusted with the care, treatment, and safety of the transgender women in CDOC custody are aware of and admit that WPATH standards of care are applicable to this community.

53. The WPATH standards of care apply "in their entirety" to transgender people in prisons and require individual assessment for appropriate treatment in a fair and tolerant climate, which may consist of outward expression of one's internal sense of gender identity, including hormone therapy and/or transition-related surgery, and social role transition, including access to gender-affirming canteen items.

54. WPATH provides that placement of transgender people in a single-sex housing unit, ward, or pod on the sole basis of the appearance of the external genitalia places transgender people at risk for victimization. Defendants have admitted that it makes facility assignments to people in custody solely on the basis of the individual's genitalia.

55. WPATH also provides that housing and shower/bathroom facilities for transgender people living in institutions should take into account their gender identity and role, physical status, dignity, and personal safety. Defendants have failed to follow these requirements for transgender women in CDOC's care, resulting in the ongoing violence they face.

56. In 2003, Congress passed the Prison Rape Elimination Act of 2003, 42 U.S.C. § 15601 et seq. ("PREA"). PREA establishes a zero-tolerance standard against sexual abuse in adult prisons and other confinement centers. PREA requires agencies to comply with national standards to eliminate sexual abuse, recognizes that transgender people face elevated risks of being victimized in prisons, mandates that state correctional facilities provide proper training to correctional staff, and requires subject agencies to establish methods to deter and detect sexual violence in prison, to identify and treat such victims, and to report incidents of such violence to the Bureau of Justice Statistics (“BSJ”).

57. The Commission established to monitor compliance with PREA noted in 2009 that gender nonconformity places transgender people at extremely high risk for abuse, and, as a result, the Commission opined “In determining whether to house transgender individuals in men’s or women’s facilities, the Commission requires individualized determinations based on other factors in addition to the person’s current genital status” (NPREC, 2009, p. 89). CDOC and all Defendants have been aware of and claim to comply with the standards required by PREA.

Defendants’ Policies and Practices

58. Defendants refuse to recognize transgender women in their custody as the women that they are. Instead, Defendants routinely refer to these women using the male names they were assigned at birth, even when these women have obtained court-ordered name changes recognizing their female identity. Documentation maintained by Defendants, whether in case management, mental health or medical files, routinely refer to these women as “men” or using male pronouns, despite Defendants’ own documentation showing that these individuals belong to the community of transgender women, most of whom have been diagnosed with GD by CDOC medical staff.

59. Even when transgender women in CDOC custody have obtained court orders recognizing their feminine names or gender markers, CDOC refuses to recognize or give effect to those lawful orders. Taliyah Murphy has changed her name in court, on her birth certificate, her Colorado ID, and her social security card. Yet, CDOC claimed it had to use the name on her commitment paperwork. So, Taliyah obtained an additional court order changing the name on the mittimus under which she was sentenced. Nevertheless, CDOC still refused to recognize her legal name reflecting her correct gender identity. Similarly, Amber Miller has since September 2018 had a Colorado ID recognizing her gender as female, yet CDOC still treats her as a man, tells her she is a man, and refers to her using masculine pronouns.

60. Defendants refuse to house transgender women in female housing facilities. The vast majority of transgender women have been and continue to be housed in male correctional facilities. Only in the last few weeks, upon pressure from the class members in this case and a related case, did CDOC finally transfer three transgender women to the CDOC female facility. Thus, there are currently 158 transgender women currently housed in CDOC male facilities. Upon their incarceration in the Colorado Department of Corrections, Defendants screen men to assess proper housing, but routinely fail to properly screen transgender women to ensure that they are appropriately protected and appropriately housed.

61. Although Defendants have an intake policy that purports to evaluate each person on a “case-by-case” basis and that states they give serious consideration to the individual’s concerns for their own safety, upon information and belief Defendants have never immediately housed a transgender women in a facility that corresponds with her gender identity upon initial intake. A large number of transgender women in CDOC's custody have requested housing in a women's facility, or in another safe manner that sufficiently protects them from the sexual violence and sexual harassment that they now suffer. Most of these class members have expressed serious safety concerns regarding being housed in all male facilities that do not adequately protect them. Defendants previously admitted that they house all people in custody according to the person's genitalia and upon information and belief, continue to do so with respect to all initial housing placements. Thus, Defendants are routinely discriminating against these women based on their sex, transgender status and/or disability and exposing them to harassment, rape, sexual assault, and other anti-transgender violence, or a heightened risk thereof by refusing to provide them safe housing.

62. In addition, Defendants routinely allow male guards to conduct searches, including strip searches, of women who are transgender, including those with GD. In at least one documented case, a twenty-year-old transgender woman who was housed in a male facility was strip searched in the presence of five male guards, two of whom were video-taping the strip search—shortly after the woman had reported being sexually assaulted. No female guards were present during the strip search, which included the guards physically cutting off her underwear, and forcing her lie on the floor while the guards shined a flashlight into her genital areas. This woman had lived as a woman for several years, had severe GD, had been on hormone replacement therapy for several years, had breasts and otherwise appeared as the woman she is. Upon information and belief, this type of strip search is routinely allowed by Defendants. Most of the class members, if not all, have routinely been subjected to searches, including strip searches, by male guards and have been subjected to solitary confinement, despite CDOC policies that male guards do not subject women to strip searches and prohibits female inmates from being placed in solitary confinement. In PREA audits conducted at Defendants' male facilities that house transgender women, Defendants deny that it conducts "cross-gender" searches of people in custody (i.e, searches by staff of persons of the opposite gender), because it does not recognize transgender women as women.

63. In fact, CDOC's response to a class member's grievance about being strip searched by male guards and request to be searched by persons who correspond to her gender identity, CDOC denied the request and responded by quoting its policy that "Strip searches will be conducted by a CDOC employee of the same sex as the offender being searched." CDOC has similarly responded to complaints by other class members by stating "It is policy that male offenders will be strip searched by male staff."

64. Despite knowing that class members in its men's prisons are repeatedly subjected to sexual violence and harassment because of their gender, Defendants have knowingly failed to implement policies to protect these women. As stated above, transgender women are at a heightened risk of sexual violence. Defendants' policies and practices are that if a transgender woman reports sexual assault, that woman is then subjected to a strip search by male guards and then placed in solitary confinement. This practice punishes the women who report sexual assault and subjects them to another form of sexual assault: a strip search by male guards. This practice also has the effect of deterring women from reporting sexual assaults and imposes a punishment on them because of their sex, transgender status and/or disability. This policy and practice has an especially severe impact on transgender women with gender dysphoria. Many of these women have been subjected to sexual violence even before entering the prison system, and being subjected to strip searches by men exacerbates both their trauma and their symptoms of gender dysphoria. Many of these women suffer from severe depression, and being placed in solitary confinement increases that depression and too often leads to further self-harming behavior.

65. Defendants also routinely fail to adequately report and investigate reports of sexual assault made by the women in its men's prisons. In documents produced by Defendants in October 2018, Defendants claim that only 45 transgender women in their custody have made reports of being raped since 1991. Some of these women were raped multiple times. Of the 65 reports of sexual assault of transgender women that Defendants have admitted to receiving, all but one of those complaints were determined by Defendants to be "unsubstantiated" or "unfounded." In one documented case, the investigation by Defendants indicated that the victim was not credible because she did not disclose a phone call she made after the rape occurred. That same investigation did not note any credibility problems with the perpetrator – despite that he had adamantly denied having any sexual contact with the victim, and then later changed his story to describing the sexual contact as "consensual."

66. Upon information and belief, Defendants knowingly fail to document the vast majority of sexual assault reports made by transgender women. Plaintiffs are aware of at least 4 rapes that were reported to Defendants in 2018 that are not reflected in the records disclosed by Defendants. In fact, Defendants' records show only one such complaint in 1991 and did not record any complaints from 1992-2000. Applying the national statistics of transgender women in custody who are subjected to sexual assault, Defendants have not documented at least 50% of the rapes suffered by these women. Thus, either Defendants' policies are having a substantial deterrent effect on these women from reporting the rapes, or Defendants have not properly documented the rapes that are reported, or both.

67. In response to federal lawsuits, Defendants recently enacted new policies providing that transgender women shall be referred to by proper pronouns and given access to the female canteen. Yet, Defendants have failed to provide proper training to staff and other workers at their facilities to ensure compliance with these policies. Although there are some staff who do treat these women with respect, there are many that do not – referring to transgender women as "it" or "thing" and subjecting them to verbal harassment because of their feminine appearance. Prior to the recent changes, women in this community were not allowed to purchase items from the female canteen and received disciplinary actions if they wore makeup or altered their clothing to conform to their gender identity. Upon information and belief, these new canteen policies still discriminate against class members, by failing to provide them all canteen options available to the women housed in the female facilities. Although men in Defendants' custody are not subject to disciplinary action for presenting as men and have always been granted access to the male canteen, women who are transgender have been denied these privileges because of their sex, transgender status and/or disability. Denying the class members, especially those who suffer from GD, discriminates against them and denies them the ability to live in an environment in which their gender identity is recognized, and thus denies them critical accommodations for their disabilities and subjects them to extreme emotional distress. Although CDOC made some recent policy changes, there is nothing to prevent CDOC from reverting to its prior policies.

Grossly Inadequate Medical and Mental Health Care for Transgender Women

68. Importantly, Defendants discriminate against class members by routinely failing to provide accommodations such as medically necessary medical and mental health care for transgender women who experience gender dysphoria.

69. Despite well-settled authority that dictates that a variety of medical and surgical treatments are often medically necessary to treat transgender women who suffer from GD, Defendants refuse to provide any of that medically necessary treatment except for the provision of HRT. Defendants' former Chair of its Gender Dysphoria Committee, Dr. Darren Lish, who was also the Chief of Psychiatry at DOC, testified in December 2018 that CDOC medical and mental health staff do not have the required expertise to make these medical assessments.² Instead, Dr. Lish testified that the medical and mental health staff do not have the training to determine who needs this treatment, and even if they did have the training, that Defendants refuse to provide any such treatment as a matter of policy. He went on to explain that Defendants have routinely denied any surgical treatment for GD, considering them "elective" surgeries. Although Dr. Lish agreed that even if these procedures were determined to be medically necessary, Defendants' policy is to refuse to provide the procedures.

70. Dr. Lish further testified that he understood that transgender women who suffer from GD have a very high rate of suicide if not treated properly. He admitted that Defendants need to obtain expertise on these matters from outside providers, but have been resistant to doing so, despite the medical necessity.

71. Instead, Defendants have created a policy that prevents transgender women who experience GD from receiving medically necessary accommodations. Defendants' policies require women with GD to receive three letters from medical and mental health providers in the CDOC system to recommend medically necessary treatment for GD. Yet, Defendants do not have qualified medical and mental health care providers who have the necessary training to make this assessment. In one case, plaintiff Taliyah Murphy did finally get a referral for surgical treatment, but the other mental health care providers who treat her refused to provide the necessary recommendations because they did not have the expertise to make the determination of whether she needed the treatment. Thus, necessary accommodations and medically necessary

² Dr. Lish testified that he had more knowledge about GD than any other medical or mental health provider in CDOC, and that he was replaced by Dr. Beatte – but that she was trained by him and did not possess more knowledge about these subjects than he did.

treatments are denied to these women because Defendants have knowingly failed to provide medical and mental health care providers who are qualified to assess whether this treatment is needed. According to Dr. Lish, “the time is now” for “[Defendants] to stop being defensive about it and do something reasonable.”

72. Class members are further discriminated against because Defendants lack qualified mental health staff to provide the proper care and treatment required for GD. The women with GD have very limited access to any qualified mental health personnel, and often only see a psychiatrist for a short time once every three months. Although Defendants do provide some so-called therapy groups to transgender women at certain facilities, the mental health providers are not adequately trained or qualified to provide the necessary therapy accommodations. At one such group at the Buena Vista facility, Rose Quinn, the mental health provider leading the group, distributed a pamphlet entitled “Regret Isn’t Rare: The Dangerous Lie of Sex Change Surgery Success” by Walt Heyer, an author with no training or credentials in medicine or mental health, who decries the evils of any transition-related surgery and urges that sex is an “immutable” characteristic that cannot be changed—contrary to widely accepted protocols for the treatment of gender dysphoria. Upon information and belief, it is not uncommon for women who attend these “group therapy” meetings to be provided this type of literature that contravenes prevailing medical standards.

73. Cupcake Rivers was in the group that received this anti-transgender propaganda. Though she filed a formal grievance on the issue, she was told that Dr. Quinn is “a professional” whose judgement cannot be “second guessed.”

74. Defendants know that they provide inadequate medical and mental health treatment that is critical to these women, and is medically necessary to those women who experience GD.

75. There is no medical or scientific support for Colorado’s refusal to provide transition-related surgical and mental health care for transgender people with gender dysphoria. Although CDOC has a policy that it will make such assessments on a “case-by case” basis, to date not one single transgender woman has ever been approved for any type of surgical treatment for gender dysphoria at CDOC, despite the overwhelming evidence to support the need for such accommodation. Instead, CDOC has mandated that any woman who believes such care to be “medically necessary” must obtain documentation from medical and mental health providers confirming that the surgical interventions are “medically necessary.” Yet, at the same time, CDOC refuses to provide these women access to qualified medical and mental health providers who can make these determinations.

76. Taliyah Murphy has been seeking surgical treatment for her gender dysphoria since 2017. The “gender dysphoria committee” told her that it could not consider her for surgery because none of her providers had recommended surgery. Yet, none of her providers had recommended surgery because none of them had the necessary training and qualifications to do so, and all of them knew that CDOC does not actually provide surgical treatment for gender dysphoria. However, in July 2019, Taliyah finally found a medical provider in CDOC who understood. In recommending transition-related surgery, Dr. Jonathan Thiele wrote, “If Ms. Murphy were permitted to undergo gender affirmation surgery, I assess that it is more likely than not that it would help to relieve some of the dysphoria she experiences due to still having male anatomy, and thus my clinical impression is that a gender affirmation surgery appears to be medically necessary.” Elated, and knowing that the WPATH Standards of Care require two recommendation letters for surgical treatment, Taliyah then requested evaluative letters from her two other providers at CTCF, Dr. Jane Gilden and Mr. Bundy, a mental health clinician. However, both of these providers have told her that they do not have the knowledge or training to make the required assessment and were not aware of anyone else on the CTCF staff who was trained to make these assessments. As a result, Taliyah continues to suffer from severe depression caused by her gender dysphoria— and is often afraid to tell anyone about the level of her depression because she fears being placed into solitary confinement, which only deepens the pain.

77. Megan Gulley describes her gender dysphoria as “feeling like an alien,” and says that her “despair grows daily.” She is in desperate need of transition-related surgery, has attempted self-castration in the past, and has continued thoughts of self-harm, including self-castration. Rather than have qualified medical providers assess her for this treatment, CDOC has denied each of her requests. Megan received a letter from the gender dysphoria committee stating, “You have been evaluated by licensed medical, psychiatric, and mental health practitioners while in the DOC and none of those providers have recommended a medical need for further evaluation by an outside specialist.” Many of her providers have explained to Megan that CDOC simply does not provide surgical treatment for gender dysphoria. Megan’s gender dysphoria is particularly exacerbated by her continued facial hair growth. Understanding the common misconceptions around electrolysis treatment for transgender women, Megan carefully explained in a grievance, “As a transgender female, my facial hair causes me considered distress, to the point where I have considered burning the follicles to prevent my facial hair from growing... I ask to be given electrolysis on my face to ease the constant distress I feel on a daily basis.” Yet, CDOC’s response to her grievance was that electrolysis is “an expensive” and “elective treatment” “available in spas and specialty areas, but it would be a misuse of clinical services in the prison setting.”

78. Despite CDOC’s refusal to provide this care, there is a strong consensus among medical and mental health professionals that transition-related surgical care and related services are the only safe and effective medical treatments for many transgender people who experience gender dysphoria, as stated above. The failure to provide this treatment to transgender women is discrimination based on sex, transgender status and disability, and violates the Colorado Constitution.

79. All class members have been subjected to similar unreasonable conditions of confinement at CDOC facilities because CDOC personnel are not qualified to diagnose or care for women with gender dysphoria, and the facilities are lacking the necessary medications and treatment programs. On information and belief, transgender women in custody at CDOC are denied access to the programs, services and benefits of the CDOC on the basis of their sex and transgender status.

80. All class members in the subclass of transgender women who have gender dysphoria are denied the programs, services and benefits of the CDOC on the basis of their disability. All of these class members have been or are at risk of serious harm as a result of Defendants' willful refusal to provide safe housing conditions and medically necessary medical and mental health care.

81. At all times relevant to this complaint, and in all of their actions alleged herein, the defendants and other pertinent employees and agents of the Colorado penal system and its subdivisions were acting within the scope of their official responsibilities and under color of Colorado state law.

82. Defendants sued in their individual capacities, Defendants Trani, Maul, Frost, Lish, and Butler, each personally participated in the decisions to deny class members necessary accommodations, including the medical and mental health treatment that were necessary. Each of these Defendants were personally involved in the creation and implementation of the CDOC custom, practice and policy to deny transgender women a gender affirming environment, to deny them access to female canteen, gender conforming clothing, to deny them privileges to wear makeup and/or sanctioned the disciplinary action taken against class members for possess or wearing makeup, to deny them the basic right to be addressed using the pronouns and names in accordance with class member's gender identity, to deny them protection from sexual harassment and sexual assault and sex trafficking by male inmates, to punish class members who complained about sexual assault by subjecting them to strip searches by make guards and then placed in solitary confinement, to refuse to provide class members with necessary mental health care for the disability known as gender dysphoria despite knowledge that inadequate accommodations and treatment would likely subject class members to heightened risk of grave harm. Dr. Lish, in a deposition in December 2018, testified that he knew that CDOC medical and mental health staff did not have the expertise needed to provide proper care and accommodations to class members. He testified that the Executive Director would make the decision regarding placement decisions of class members who at that time was Defendant Raemisch and is now Defendant Williams. Lish also testified that he had numerous discussions with the head of the medical and mental health staff, as well as the Deputy Director of Prisons about the need to accommodate class members and provide them proper care and treatment. Defendant Raemish testified that he had numerous conversations with Defendant Trani and other top CDOC management about the care and treatment of class members, including whether accommodations should be provided to this community. All of these Defendants knew and know about the necessary accommodations, including the medical and mental health care needed by class members, yet have each participated in decisions to deny these accommodations and/or have decision-making authority over whether the accommodations have been granted, and failed to take necessary action. Each of these Defendants knew and know that the law required them to provide class members with necessary accommodations for their sex and/or disability, that the laws require them not to discriminated against class members based on their sex, and requires them not to subject class members to cruel and unusual punishment.

83. The defendants who are sued in their individual capacities acted in violation of the clearly established law regarding discrimination against individuals based on their sex, transgender status and disabilities, and in doing so inflicted unconstitutional cruel and unusual punishment.

84. The defendants engaged in the discriminatory practices described herein with malice or reckless indifference to the rights of all class members.

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF

87. Colorado prisons are a place of “public accommodation” as defined under C.R.S. § 24-34-601(1). Defendants operate the facilities that house class members and are responsible for providing the full and equal enjoyment of its services, programs and benefits to the public regardless of the status of these women as transgender women.

88. Defendants refuse to provide these services, programs and benefits of these public accommodations to class members because of their transgender status.

89. Defendants provide these public accommodations to cisgender men and cisgender women but deny these services to transgender women because of their sex and transgender status.

90. Defendants discriminate against these women on the basis of their sex and transgender status, in violation of Colorado law, and in so doing, cause these women serious physical and psychological harm, and subject them to an unreasonable risk of harm.

³ Although sexual orientation and gender identity are separate concepts, C.R.S. § 24-34-301(7) defines “sexual orientation” as “an individual’s orientation toward heterosexuality, homosexuality, bisexuality, or transgender status or another individual’s perception thereof.”

Defendants operate the facilities that house class members and are responsible for providing the full and equal enjoyment of its services, programs and benefits to the public regardless of the status of these women as transgender women who have gender dysphoria.

94. Gender dysphoria is a mental health condition that substantially limits one or more of major life activities and thus is a disability under the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act.

95. Defendants refuse to provide these services, programs and benefits of these public accommodations to class members with gender dysphoria because of their disability

96. Defendants provide these public accommodations to cisgender men and cisgender women who do not have gender dysphoria but deny these services to transgender women with gender dysphoria because of their disability.

97. Defendants discriminate against these women on the basis of their disability, in violation of Colorado law, and in so doing, cause these women serious physical and psychological harm, and subject them to an unreasonable risk of harm.

99. The Colorado Constitution, Article II, Section 29 provides: “Equality of the sexes. Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the state of Colorado or any of its political subdivisions on account of sex.”

100. As detailed above, all class members are being denied equal treatment by the State of Colorado because of their sex.

101. This denial of equal treatment to class members because of their sex has caused, and continues to cause, substantial harm to these women.

102. Defendants have acted in reckless disregard to the serious medical and mental health needs of the class members and have subjected them to serious harms and serious risk of harm. Defendants' conduct has been deliberately indifferent, knowingly and willfully, and violates the Colorado Constitution. Defendants have created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional and unlawful practices occurred and knowingly allow such a policy and practices to continue, despite knowing that it causes, and will continue to cause imminent danger to class members.

103. Class members have suffered emotional distress and often physical pain as a result of the Defendants' deliberate indifference to their rights and welfare, and violations of the Colorado Constitution.

109. Defendants have acted in reckless disregard to the serious medical and mental health needs of the class members and have subjected them to serious harms and serious risk of harm. Defendants' conduct has been deliberately indifferent, knowingly and willfully, and violates the Colorado Constitution.
