JERRY E. STEWART, et al.,

 BRAD GATES, et al.,
 Defendants.

) Case No. CV 75-3075-GLT
)
) ORDER VACATING EARLIER
) ORDERS AND DISMISSING CASE
)
)

In 1978, and by several follow-up rulings, this Court found certain constitutional violations of pre-trial inmates' rights at the Orange County, California jails, and issued a series of specific mandatory minimum orders to remedy the violations. Stewart v. Gates, 450 F. Supp. 583 (C.D. Cal. 1978). Now, after briefing by the parties and an evidentiary hearing, the Court considers whether these continuing Stewart orders are still necessary or appropriate and whether they should be modified or vacated. Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 60(b); Prison Litigation Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3626. The Court concludes the orders should be vacated and the case should be dismissed.

20

1 A. THE DEVELOPING LAW

2 In the 1970s, few standardized rules governed the treatment of 3 pre-trial inmates in the nation's jails. Overcrowding was a 4 persistent problem, and constitutional rights violations were not 5 uncommon.

6 In 1978, and in several follow-up rulings, this Court made a 7 series of orders to remedy various constitutional violations found to 8 exist at the Orange County, California jails. By way of mandatory 9 minimums, the orders set standards for inmate treatment on such 10 diverse topics as time allocated for meals, seating in holding cells, 11 dayroom access, exercise time, visitor access, telephone access, 12 access to religious services and advisors, children visitation, books 13 and magazines, mail, mattresses and blankets, sleep time, law book 14 access, and population caps.¹

15 Since the Stewart orders 27 years ago, the approach to jail 16 litigation and regulation has changed greatly. At the federal level, 17 Congress and the Supreme Court have redefined how jail conditions are 18 supervised and challenged. In 1996, Congress enacted the Prison 19 Litigation Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3626, providing an inmate grievance 20 administrative process.

21 At the state level, changes have been significant. Since the 22 Stewart orders, California codified jail procedures and policies in 23 Title 15, California Code of Regulations, covering most of the issues 24 raised in the Stewart orders, and many more.

25 Much of the development in this area of the law resulted from two 26 U.S. Supreme Court decisions, both coming after the Stewart orders:

27 _____
28 ¹ Other Stewart orders have been made, but, over the years, have become moot, superseded, or overruled.

1 Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979), and Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S.
2 78 (1987). These cases, and those that follow after them, make clear 3 that jail officials have "wide-ranging" deference in handling day-to-4 day operations of jail facilities. When the federal courts intervene, 5 it must be done with restraint, with due regard to jail needs and 6 exigencies. Noting that "the operation of our correctional facilities 7 is peculiarly the province of the Legislative and Executive Branches 8 of our Government, not the Judicial," the Supreme Court cautioned 9 against federal courts, "in the name of the Constitution, becom[ing] 10 increasingly enmeshed in the minutiae of prison operations." Bell 441 11 U.S. at 548, 562.

12 The Stewart orders approached the issue from an Eighth Amendment 13 framework. The Supreme Court has held, in cases decided after 14 Stewart, the Fourteenth Amendment governs the conditions of 15 confinement of pretrial detainees. However, because an Eighth 16 Amendment violation may also be a Fourteenth Amendment violation, 17 Oregon Advocacy Center v. Mink, 322 F.3d 1101, 1120-1121 & n.11 (9th 18 Cir. 2003), an Eighth Amendment violation may be actionable.

19 Unlike Stewart's mandatory minimum quantities, the approach 20 developed over 27 years since Stewart uses a flexible analysis in 21 which jail administrators are given wide latitude to address security 22 and other concerns.

23 The constitutional rights of a convicted prisoner are different 24 (and lower) from those of a pretrial detainee. While a prisoner's 25 rights arise primarily from the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against 26 cruel and unusual punishment, Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104 27 (1976), a pretrial detainee's constitutional rights arise from the 28 procedural and substantive due process guarantees of the Fourteenth

1 Amendment. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. at 535 & n.16. This distinction 2 is crucial: a state cannot punish a pretrial detainee. Id. These 3 rights are related, however, because a pretrial detainee's due process 4 rights are "at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections 5 available to a convicted prisoner." Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 6 633, 639 (5th Cir. 1996) (citing City of Revere v. Massachusetts Gen.
7 Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244 (1983)).

8 In Bell, the Supreme Court began its analysis of the 9 constitutionality of pretrial detention conditions by noting "the 10 Government has a substantial interest in ensuring that persons accused 11 of crimes are available for trials and, ultimately, for service of 12 their sentences, [and] confinement of such persons pending trial is a 13 legitimate means of furthering that interest." Bell, 441 U.S. at 534.
14 The government has "legitimate interests that stem from its need to 15 manage the facility in which the individual is detained." Id. at 540.
16 "[M]aintaining institutional security and preserving internal order 17 and discipline are essential goals that may require limitation or 18 retraction of the retained constitutional rights of both convicted 19 prisoners and pretrial detainees." Id. at 546 (footnote omitted).

20 However, a pretrial detainee has a "right to be free from 21 punishment and [an] an understandable desire to be as comfortable as 22 possible during his confinement, both of which may conceivably 23 coalesce at some point." Id. at 534. The inquiry is to "determin[e] 24 whether particular restrictions and conditions accompanying pretrial 25 detention amount to punishment in the constitutional sense of that 26 word." Id. at 538. This is a rationality test:

27 [I]f a particular condition or restriction of pretrial 28 detention is reasonably related to a legitimate governmental objective, it does not, without more,

1 amount to "punishment." Conversely, if a restriction 2 or condition is not reasonably related to a legitimate 3 goal – if it is arbitrary or purposeless – a court 4 permissibly may infer that the purpose of the 5 governmental action is punishment that may not 6 constitutionally be inflicted upon detainees qua 7 detainees.

8 Id. at 539 (footnote omitted).²

9 This rationality test has two parts. The Court looks to 10 legislative intent to determine if there is an express intent to 11 impose punitive restrictions. U.S. v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 747 12 (1987) (citing Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 269 (1984)). Unless 13 the legislative body expressly intended to impose punitive 14 restrictions, the punitive/regulatory distinction turns on "whether an 15 alternative purpose to which [the restriction] may rationally be 16 connected is assignable for it, and whether it appears excessive in 17 relation to the alternative purpose assigned [to it]." Id. (quoting 18 Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168-69 (1963)).

19 The Court looks at the intent of the jailers to "examine whether 20 the restriction is based upon an express intent to inflict 21 punishment."³ Valdez v. Rosenbaum, 302 F.3d 1039, 1045 (9th Cir. 2002).
22 If there is no express punitive intent found, the Court analyzes the 23 ² The Court also noted "[t]here is ... a de minimis level of 24 imposition with which the Constitution is not concerned." Id. at 25 539 n.21 (quoting Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 674 (1977)).

26 ³ This analysis is somewhat different if the detainee is 27 claiming the deprivation of a separate constitutional right, such 28 as the First Amendment, as opposed to claiming a restriction violates the detainee's substantive due process right to be free from punishment. In the former, the Court first looks to a detainee's underlying constitutional right. "Whether these restrictions constitute 'punishment' for the purposes of Fourteenth Amendment jurisprudence [may] require[] some analysis of the scope of plaintiffs' [underlying constitutional] rights, because the deprivation of a nonexistent right cannot amount to punishment." Jones v. City of San Francisco, 976 F.Supp. 896, 914 (N.D. Cal. 1997).

1 alternative purpose to determine if it is rationally related to a 2 legitimate governmental objective.⁴ Bell, 441 U.S. at 539. Under this 3 permissive standard, Orange County has very broad leeway in making and 4 applying jail rules. The continuing viability and need for the 5 Stewart orders must be reassessed.

6 B. THE STEWART ORDERS

7 Under current legal standards, the Stewart orders are no longer 8 necessary or appropriate.

9 1. Meal Time

10 A Stewart order requires detainees be given at least 15 minutes 11 to eat their meals. Under the Bell analysis and current case law, 12 this federal requirement is not necessary or appropriate.

13 There is no evidence of an express punitive intent in the jail's 14 restriction of meal time. There is evidence meal scheduling 15 restrictions are imposed to limit violence and otherwise ensure 16 safety, and 15 minutes is usually allocated for meals, but this 17 standard is sometimes not met.

18 Bell requires the Court to examine whether the County's meal time

19 20 ⁴ "A reasonable relationship between the governmental 21 interest and the challenged restriction does not require an 22 'exact fit,' ... nor does it require showing a 'least restrictive 23 alternative.'" Valdez, 302 F.3d at 1046 (quoting Mauro v. Arpaio, 24 188 F.3d 1054, 1060 (9th Cir. 1999) (en banc); Thornburgh v.
25 Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 410-12 (1989)).

26 Moreover, it does not matter whether [the Court] 27 agree[s] with the defendants or whether the 28 policy in fact advances the jail's legitimate interests. The only question that [the Court] must answer is whether the defendants' judgment was 'rational,' that is, whether the defendants might reasonably have thought that the policy would advance its interests.

Mauro, 188 F.3d at 1060 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

1 rules and practice are rationally related to a legitimate governmental 2 interest, such as security. The Court finds they are.⁵

3 Failure to provide inmates with meals sufficient to maintain 4 normal health may constitute a violation of the Eighth or Fourteenth 5 Amendments. See Cunningham v. Jones, 567 F.2d 653, 655-60 (6th Cir.
6 1977), but there is no evidence of that here. The Due Process Clause 7 is satisfied as long as detainees are served well-balanced meals, 8 containing sufficient nutritional value to preserve health. Green v.
9 Ferrell, 801 F.2d 765, 770 (5th Cir. 1986).

10 Other than Stewart and one other case decided by the same judge,⁶ 11 there are no cases indicating pretrial detainees are constitutionally 12 entitled to have a certain amount of time to eat. There is also no 13 specific constitutional case law to the contrary. There is, however, 14 authority indicating (1) meal restrictions are appropriate in general, 15 see, e.g., Butler v. Crumlish, 229 F.Supp. 565, 566 (E.D. Pa. 1964) 16 ("(P)ending trial ... a defendant may be imprisoned in a cell and must 17 submit to the routine of the prison relating to his meals, his 18 exercise and the many other activities of daily life. All these 19 matters, however, are incidental elements in the organized caretaking 20 of the general company of prisoners."), abrogated on other grounds by 21 Rigney v. Hendrick, 355 F.2d 710 (3d Cir. 1965); and (2) meal time

24 ⁵ In considering whether a specific practice or policy is 25 "reasonably related" to security interests, courts play a very 26 limited role, since such considerations are peculiarly within the 27 province and professional expertise of corrections officials.
28 Bell, 441 U.S. at 540 n.23.

⁶ The same judge also imposed the 15 minutes-to-eat restriction in Los Angeles County in Rutherford v. Pitchess, 457
F.Supp. 104, 116(C.D. Cal. 1978).

1 restrictions are appropriate for prison inmates (not pretrial 2 detainees) in particular, see, e.g., Robbins v. South, 595 F.Supp.
3 785, 790 (D. Mont. 1984) ("The dehumanizing aspect of being required 4 to eat in 15 minutes, noted in plaintiff's complaint, is not of 5 sufficient intensity to be considered punishment, much less cruel and 6 unusual punishment.").

7 Under the current law and the Court's necessary deference to jail 8 regulations and practices, the occasional restriction of detainees' 9 meal times to less than 15 minutes is constitutional under Bell. The 10 jail is not constitutionally required to provide a minimum meal time, 11 provided detainees are receiving adequate nutrition. State law 12 provides time rules. There is no longer a need for Stewart's 13 requirement on this issue.

14 2. Seats in Holding Cells

15 A Stewart order requires a seat for each inmate in a holding cell 16 when going to or from court. Under Bell, this requirement is not 17 necessary.

18 There is apparently no other published opinion or state 19 regulation establishing a seating requirement. However, there is 20 ample authority on an analogous topic: overcrowding, by itself, does 21 not rise to the level of a constitutional violation. Jenkins v.
22 Velasco, 1995 WL 765315, at *5-6 (N.D. Ill. 1995); Malone v. Becher, 23 2003 WL 22080737 at *10 (S.D. Ind. 2003); Chavis v. Fairman, 1994 WL 24 55719 at *3-4 (N.D. Ill. 1994); Coughlin v. Sheahan, 1995 WL 12255 at 25 *3 & n.3 (N.D. Ill. 1995).

26 There is no evidence of a punitive intent concerning jail 27 seating. The day-to-day detail of seating for inmates moving to and 28 from court is related to a legitimate governmental objective, and is

1 properly left to the discretion of jail officials. Turner v. Safley, 2 482 U.S. 78, 89 (1987). Under present law, no federal court order is 3 necessary or appropriate.

4 3. Access to Visitors

5 Stewart orders that inmates in administrative segregation be 6 allowed to receive visitors at least twice a week. Under Bell and 7 current case law, this requirement is unnecessary and inappropriate.

8 Orange County must be given wide latitude in restricting access 9 to visitors. See Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 589 (1984); Bell 10 v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. at 540 n.23. Visitation may be denied to 11 pretrial detainees based on legitimate security concerns. See Davis v.
12 Milwaukee County, 225 F.Supp.2d 967, 974 (E.D. Wis. 2002) (citing 13 Block 468 U.S. at 588).⁷

14 It is settled that pretrial detainees have no constitutional 15 right to contact visits. Block, 468 U.S. at 585-88. It is also 16 settled that convicted inmates have no constitutional right to 17 unfettered visitation. See Kentucky Dept. of Corr. v. Thompson, 490 18 U.S. 454, 460 (1989). It appears pretrial detainees also do not have 19 a right to unfettered visitation. See Martin v. Tyson, 845 F.2d 1451, 20 1455-56 (7th Cir. 1988) (limitations on amount and length of 21

22 ⁷ The First Amendment is implicated by visitation. See 23 Feeley v. Sampson, 570 F.2d 364, 372 (1st Cir. 1978) ("Visitation 24 rights, besides having to meet the previously described due 25 process standard, reflect first amendment values, most clearly 26 the right of association."); Brenneman v. Madigan, 343 F.Supp.
27 128, 141 (N.D. Cal. 1972) (class of pre-trial detainees has a 28 First Amendment right to visitation). But see Morrow v. Harwell, 768 F.2d 619, 625 (5th Cir. 1985) (indicating pre-trial detainees have no First Amendment right to visitation, but not reaching the issue). However, the Ninth Circuit has held a detainee's right to communicate is "subject to rational limitations in the face of legitimate security interests of the penal institution."
Strandberg v. City of Helena, 791 F.2d 744, 747 (9th Cir. 1986).

1 visitation at county jail were justified by small size of jail and 2 number of people to be accommodated).⁸

3 There is no evidence of an express punitive intent in the 4 restriction of visitation, as visitation poses security concerns.
5 Under Bell, limitations on visitation are only unconstitutional if 6 imposed for punishment. Because Orange County must be given wide 7 latitude in this area, Stewart's blanket minimum is not appropriate.

8 4. Rooftop Exercise

9 A Stewart order requires detainees in administrative segregation 10 be given at least two hours per week of rooftop exercise and 11 recreation. Because the case law indicates some minimum amount of 12 exercise is required, but stresses deference to the jail and requires 13 a fact-specific analysis, Stewart's fixed minimum of two hours is not 14 an appropriate or necessary order.

15 Regular exercise of some type is crucial for the psychological 16 and physical fitness of prisoners. Bailey v. Shillinger, 828 F.2d 651, 17 653 (10th Cir. 1987); Spain v. Procnier, 600 F.2d 189, 199 (9th Cir.
18 1979); See also Wrice v. Koehler, 1993 WL 300269 at *3 (N.D. Cal.
19 1993) (allegation pretrial detainees were denied all access to 21 22 ⁸ In cases decided before Bell, courts disagreed as to 23 whether pretrial detainees have a right to pretrial visitation at 24 all. Compare Feazell v. Augusta County Jail, 401 F.Supp. 405, 407 25 (W.D. Va. 1975) ("Visiting privileges are properly within the 26 determination of internal prison considerations.") and Henry v.

27 State of Delaware, 368 F.Supp. 286, 288 (D. Del. 1973) ("[T]here 28 is no federal constitutional or statutory right to visitation privileges.") with Jones v. Diamond, 594 F.2d 997, 1013 (5th Cir.
1979) ("[I]f a jailer were to refuse to allow the ordinary detainee any visitation privileges ... such conduct would be unconstitutional....") and Feeley, 570 F.2d at 372 ("A refusal ... to allow the ordinary detainee any visitation privileges ... would be unconstitutional.").

1 exercise stated a cognizable § 1983 claim). However, "what 2 constitutes adequate exercise will depend on the circumstances of each 3 case, including the physical characteristics of the cell and jail and 4 the average length of stay of the inmates." Housley v. Dodson, 41 F.3d 5 597, 599 (10th Cir. 1994); accord Buffington v. O'Leary, 748 F.Supp.
6 633, 634 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (no constitutional claim where a prisoner 7 had a reasonable opportunity for exercise and did not allege any 8 significant physical deterioration).

9 For example, in Campbell v. Cauthron, 623 F.2d 503, 507 (8th Cir.
10 1980), the Eighth Circuit held pretrial detainees are ordinarily 11 entitled to one hour of exercise outside their cells each day if they 12 spend more than sixteen hours in their cells. However, courts have 13 held pretrial detainees have no fundamental right to exercise if they 14 are incarcerated for a short time. See, e.g., Wilson v. Blankenship, 15 163 F.3d 1284, 1292 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding there is no "clearly 16 established constitutional law" requiring a jail to provide access to 17 outdoor exercise during time of incarceration when the term of 18 incarceration was short).

19 As with the other restrictions, there is no evidence of an intent 20 to punish in restricting rooftop exercise and recreation. There was 21 evidence a group of detainees congregating in an open area containing 22 weights and other equipment raises security concerns. The Court finds 23 the County's provision of exercise time is rationally related to a 24 legitimate governmental interest. The fixed-minimum Stewart order is 25 unnecessary and inappropriate.

26 5. Day Room Access

27 Stewart requires detainees in administrative segregation be 28 allowed two hours of day room access per day. There is no showing of 1 a punitive intent present in the restriction of day room access.

2 There has been a showing, however, Orange County has a legitimate 3 governmental interest in limiting or preventing day room access for 4 security and control of detainees. The denial of day room access to 5 pretrial detainees for security reasons does not violate the 6 Fourteenth Amendment. Green, 801 F.2d at 767. Stewart's fixed 7 minimum is unnecessary and inappropriate.

8 6. Telephone Access

9 In Stewart, the Court instructed Orange County to install 16 10 additional payphones, and to make all phones reasonably accessible.
11 The evidence shows the additional phones were installed and phones are 12 reasonably accessible.

13 Pretrial detainees do not have a right to telephone access, per 14 se. Pretrial detainees instead have a First Amendment "right to 15 communicate with persons outside prison walls ... [and] [u]se of a 16 telephone provides a means of exercising this right." Valdez, 302 F.3d 17 at 1048. Regulations limiting pretrial detainees' speech do not 18 violate the First Amendment so long as they are reasonably related to 19 a legitimate penological interest. Id. (citing Turner, 482 U.S. at 89 20 (1987)); cf. Strandberg, 791 F.2d at 747 (recognizing arrestees have a 21 First Amendment right to telephone access, but noting this right is 22 "subject to rational limitations in the face of legitimate security 23 interests of the penal institution"). Under this framework, the Ninth 24 Circuit has upheld severe restrictions on telephone access based on 25 security concerns. See Valdez, 302 F.3d at 1045-47. A Stewart federal 26 order on this topic is unnecessary and inappropriate.

27 7. Visitation by Unaccompanied Minor Children

28 In Stewart, the Court required Orange County to allow visits by a 1 detainee's unaccompanied minor children. In Rutherford, 457 F.Supp.

2 at 111 (C.D. Cal. 1978), the same judge required the same in Los 3 Angeles County jails. These are the only two cases mandating such 4 visits.

5 Recent Supreme Court authority indicates this requirement is not 6 proper:

7 Turning to the restrictions on visitation by children 8 [including the requirement minor children be 9 accompanied by an adult], we conclude that the 10 regulations bear a rational relation to [the jail's] 11 valid interests in maintaining internal security and 12 protecting child visitors from exposure to sexual or 13 other misconduct or from accidental injury. The 14 regulations promote internal security, perhaps the 15 most legitimate of penological goals by reducing the 16 total number of visitors and by limiting the 17 disruption caused by children in particular.
18 Protecting children from harm is also a legitimate 19 goal. As for the regulation requiring children to be 20 accompanied by a family member or legal guardian, it 21 is reasonable to ensure that the visiting child is 22 accompanied and supervised by those adults charged 23 with protecting the child's best interests.

24 Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 133 (2003) (internal citations 25 omitted). The Stewart order is now moot, and is inappropriate.

26 8. Mail

27 A Stewart order requires detainees be allowed to receive books, 28 magazines, and newspapers that may be lawfully sent through the U.S. mail. The Court recognized the jail must be allowed "reasonable withholding for inspection for contraband and security purposes." Stewart, 450 F.Supp. at 590. This standard is correct under current law, but is no longer necessary as a federal order because the right is well-established and no violation is apparent.

Prisoners and detainees have a First Amendment right to receive publications through the mail. Brooks v. Seiter, 779 F.2d 1177, 1181 (6th Cir. 1985); Pepperling v. Crist, 678 F.2d 787, 789-91 (9th Cir.

1 1982); see also Martin, 845 F.2d at 1454 (absolute ban on newspapers 2 to pretrial detainee would violate First Amendment); Sizemore v.
3 Williford, 829 F.2d 608, 610 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding permanent 4 withholding of prisoner's daily newspaper by prison officials 5 implicates First Amendment rights).

6 The Supreme Court has recognized reasonable restrictions on 7 inmate/detainee mail are proper. See Turner, 482 U.S. at 91-93 8 (upholding regulation prohibiting certain types of correspondence 9 between inmates at different institutions); Bell, 441 U.S. at 549-50 10 (upholding regulation that allowed only publishers, bookstores, and 11 book clubs to mail hardbound books to pretrial detainees because 12 hardbound books could contain contraband). A Stewart order stating 13 this well-established right is unnecessary.

14 9. Mattresses and Blankets

15 A Stewart order requires each detainee be given a mattress and a 16 blanket. The failure to provide a pretrial detainee with a mattress 17 and a bed "unquestionably constitutes a cognizable Fourteenth 18 Amendment claim." Thompson v. City of Los Angeles, 885 F.2d 1439, 1448 19 (9th Cir. 1989) (collecting cases). Because this right is clearly 20 established, Stewart's separate mandate is not necessary.

21 The Ninth Circuit has not spoken on the requirement of blankets 22 for pretrial detainees, but recent prison cases show the need for 23 adequate blankets in that context. "Prison officials have a duty to 24 ensure that prisoners are provided adequate shelter, food, clothing, 25 sanitation, medical care, and personal safety." Johnson v. Lewis, 217 26 F.3d 726, 731 (9th Cir. 2000) (citing Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 27 832 (1994)). "The circumstances, nature, and duration of a 28 deprivation of these necessities must be considered in determining

1 whether a constitutional violation has occurred." Id.

2 The Seventh Circuit has held a pretrial detainee sufficiently 3 alleged a Fourteenth Amendment violation where he was denied 4 protection from cold temperatures by the jail staff's failure to 5 provide blankets. Antonelli v. Sheahan, 81 F.3d 1422, 1433 (7th Cir.
6 1996). District Courts in Oregon and the Northern Mariana Islands 7 have also indicated the denial of adequate blankets may constitute a 8 violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Seed v. Hudson, 1994 WL 229096, 9 *3 (D. N.Mar.I. 1994); Martino v. Carey, 563 F.Supp. 984, 1000 (D. Or.
10 1983); but see Gilland v. Owens, 718 F.Supp. 665, 684-85 (W.D. Tenn.
11 1989) (short-term deprivations of toilet paper, towels, sheets, 12 blankets, mattresses, toothpaste, and toothbrushes did not violate 13 Eighth or Fourteenth Amendments).

14 Under the body of developing law, a pretrial detainee must be 15 given a blanket, or denied it for only a short period of time, if the 16 jail is cold and there is no adequate alternative means for warmth.
17 See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303 (1991) (allegations of a low 18 cell temperature in combination with the failure to issue blankets may 19 be sufficient to state an Eighth Amendment claim); Dixon v. Godinez, 20 114 F.3d 640, 643 (7th Cir. 1997) ("The question ... is not simply 21 whether the inmate had some alternative means of warmth, but whether 22 the alternative was adequate to combat the cold. Moreover, it is not 23 just the severity of the cold, but the duration of the condition, 24 which determines whether the conditions of confinement are 25 unconstitutional.") (internal citation omitted).

26 Under Bell, the denial of a blanket is only unconstitutional if 27 punitive. Even so, courts have recognized the appropriateness of 28 denying items such as blankets to inmates (not pretrial detainees) for

1 legitimate security/suicide concerns or to discipline unruly 2 prisoners. See, e.g., O'Leary v. Iowa State Men's Reformatory, 79 F.3d
3 82, 83-84 (8th Cir. 1996) (discipline); Williams v. Delo, 49 F.3d 442, 4 445-47 (8th Cir. 1995) (same); Myers v. County of Lake, 30 F.3d 847, 5 850 (7th Cir. 1994) ("[I]nmates may be deprived not only of belts and 6 ties, but also of pens, sheets, blankets, even clothing, for almost 7 any object may be used to harm oneself...").

8 There is no evidence here of punitive action or ongoing 9 violations. Rights on this topic are now sufficiently clear under 10 existing law that a specific Stewart order is unnecessary and 11 inappropriate.

12 10. Eight Hours of Sleep

13 An order in Stewart requires Orange County to allow a detainee 8 14 hours of uninterrupted sleep the nights before and after a court 15 appearance. Other than this case, there is apparently no other case 16 mandating a minimum number of hours of sleep any detainee or inmate 17 was required to be given. Recent case law and Bell indicate this 18 order is no longer necessary or appropriate.

19 Courts have indicated only severe, frequent, and persistent sleep 20 interruption amounts to a Fourteenth Amendment violation. See, e.g., 21 Antonelli, 81 F.3d at 1434 (allegation by pretrial detainee that noise 22 "occurred every night, often all night, interrupting or preventing 23 [plaintiff's] sleep" stated a claim); Ferguson v. Cape Girardeau 24 County, 88 F.3d 647, 650 (8th Cir. 1996) (no claim where detainee was 25 forced to sleep in a cell lighted 24 hours a day but detainee was 26 observed sleeping for 93 total hours in 14 days); Spivey v. Doria, 27 1994 WL 97756, at *11 (N.D. Ill. 1994) (finding no constitutional 28 violation where inmate only alleged noise level caused him to lose

1 sleep and made him irritable, and noting “[f]ederal courts are not the 2 forums to determine proper lighting and noise levels in jails”).

3 An occasional sleep deprivation is not necessarily a 4 constitutional violation. Stewart’s mandate on this issue is 5 unnecessary and not in accord with current law.

6 11. Proximately Observing a Cell Search

7 A Stewart order required a detainee be sufficiently close to any 8 “shakedown” search of his cell. In Block, the Supreme Court reversed 9 the same judge’s imposition of the same requirement on the Los Angeles 10 County jail, holding the jail’s unannounced searches were proper under 11 Bell. 468 U.S. at 589-91. Under Block, the order in this case is 12 inappropriate.

13 12. Religious Services

14 A Stewart order requires detainees in administrative segregation 15 be allowed to attend one regularly scheduled religious service per 16 week or to have an individual visit to the chapel of 20 minutes.
17 There do not appear to be other cases mandating such minimums.⁹

18 Under the Constitution, “reasonable opportunities must be 19 afforded to all prisoners to exercise the religious freedom guaranteed 20 by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.” Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 21 322 n.2 (1972). However, prison regulations limiting inmates’ free 22 religious exercise do not violate the First Amendment so long as they 23 are reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest. Turner

24 25 ⁹ Such a mandate for administrative segregation is 26 particularly problematic. “[T]he hardship associated with 27 administrative segregation, such as loss of recreational and 28 rehabilitative programs or confinement to one’s cell for a lengthy period of time, does not violate the due process clause because there is no liberty interest in remaining in the general population.” Anderson v. County of Kern, 45 F.3d 1310, at 1315 (9th Cir. 1995).

1 | v. Safley, 482 U.S. at 89.

2 | Under Turner, the Court considers four factors in deciding
3 | whether the restrictions meet this rational basis scrutiny: (1)
4 | whether the restrictions have a logical connection to legitimate
5 | government interests; (2) whether alternative means of religious 6 | expression remain open to inmates; (3) the likely impact of 7 | accommodating the inmates' asserted right on guards, other inmates,
8 | and the general allocation of jail resources; and (4) the existence of 9 | ready alternatives to the existing policy. See id. at 89-91.

10 | Applying Turner and Cruz, courts have held restrictions on 11 | worship for security purposes are generally appropriate. See, e.g., 12 | Pedraza v. Meyer, 919 F.2d 317, 320 (5th Cir. 1990) (restriction of 13 | convicted jail inmates to worship in "security vestibule"
14 | constitutional); Jones, 976 F.Supp. at 914-15 (obstacles to regular 15 | attendance of religious services did not amount to "punishment" under 16 | Fourteenth Amendment where the restrictions were logically related to 17 | legitimate concerns about safety and orderly administration of jail);
18 | Muslim v. Frame, 854 F.Supp. 1215, 1227 (E.D. Pa. 1994) (denying 19 | detainee access to telephone and religious services during 20 | administrative segregation was reasonably related to goal of 21 | maintaining maximum security within jail).

22 | There is no indication of punishment here, or any ongoing
23 | violation. Under the current case law and Bell, Stewart's automatic
24 | mandate on this issue is unnecessary and inappropriate.

25 | 13. Lawbook Access

26 | A Stewart order endorsed the jail policy of inmate access to law 27 | books, and ordered that it apply to each facility of the jail. The 28 | legal standards for inmate lawbook access are now relatively clear,

1 and the jail has policies for proper access by all inmates. There is 2 no indication of an ongoing violation. A federal Stewart order is no 3 longer necessary or appropriate.

4 14. Inter-Jail Mail with Jailhouse Lawyers

5 A Stewart order provided detailed procedures for inmate 6 communication with a "jail house lawyer" in the same facility. State 7 law provides policies for regulation of correspondence, and the jail 8 permits communication under acceptable constitutional standards.
 9 There is no indication of an ongoing constitutional violation. This 10 sort of a supervisory Stewart order is no longer appropriate, nor is 11 it needed.

12 15. Population Cap

13 Several Stewart orders set population caps of a certain maximum 14 number of inmates assigned housing at certain areas in the jail 15 system.

16 A population cap may be an appropriate remedy when constitutional 17 violations are caused by overcrowding. Harris v. Angelina County, 31 18 F.3d 331, 336 (5th Cir. 1994). The Ninth Circuit has recognized the 19 use of a population cap remedy in an appropriate case. Balla v. Idaho 20 State Bd. of Corrections, 869 F.2d 461, 470-73 (9th Cir. 1989).¹⁰

21 The showing before the Court indicates there is not presently an 22

23 ¹⁰ Numerous courts have concluded a population cap may be an 24 appropriate remedy. See, e.g., Alberti v. Sheriff of Harris 25 County, 978 F.2d 893, 896 (5th Cir. 1992) ("A numerical cap on 26 the number of prisoners is not an overly intrusive remedy."); 27 Mercer v. Mitchell, 908 F.2d 763, 770-71 (11th Cir. 1990) (same); 28 Tillery v. Owens, 907 F.2d 418, 430 (3d Cir. 1990) (collecting cases); Marion County Jail Inmates v. Cottey, 2002 U.S. Dist.
 LEXIS 9216, *4-6 (S.D. Ind. 2002) (establishing fines for sheriff if court-ordered population cap for lock-up exceeded); Loya v.
Bd. of County Comm'rs, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11242, at *6 (D.
 Idaho 1992) (ordering a population cap).

1 ongoing constitutional violation caused by overcrowding. Decades ago 2 this Court had bona fide concerns about overcrowding conditions, and 3 took the necessary steps to remedy them. In the following years, jail 4 authorities also took appropriate steps to confront overcrowded 5 conditions, and worked to resolve them. Now, years after the original 6 order, there is no showing of an overcrowding condition rising to the 7 level of a federal constitutional violation. Compliance with the 8 applicable constitutional standard is present. Standards for 9 unconstitutional overcrowding are sufficiently stated in the law that 10 a future aggrieved party could frame an appropriate § 1983 case.

11 The Stewart specific population cap is no longer necessary, and 12 is inappropriate under current law.

13 C. THE CALIFORNIA STATUTORY SCHEME

14 Since the Stewart orders in 1978, a substantial statutory scheme 15 of jail regulation has been enacted in Title 15, California Code of 16 Regulations. The California Board of Corrections is charged with 17 establishing the minimum standards for local detention facilities.
18 California Penal Code § 6030. On the Stewart issues, the Board of 19 Corrections' regulations require the following minimum standards in 20 all California jails:

- 21 • "A minimum of fifteen minutes shall be allowed for the actual 22 consumption of each meal except for those inmates on therapeutic 23 diets where the responsible physician has prescribed additional time." Cal. Code Regs., Title 15, § 1240.
- 24 • "The facility administrator shall develop written policies, 25 procedures, and determine the scope of library service . . . The 26 library service shall include access to legal reference 27 materials, current information on community services and 28 resources, and religious, educational, and recreational reading material." Id. § 1064.

1 • "The facility administrator of a Type II¹¹ or III facility shall 2 develop written policies and procedures for an exercise and 3 recreation program, in an area designed for recreation, which 4 will allow a minimum of three hours of such activity distributed 5 over a period of seven days." Id. § 1065.

6 • "The facility administrator shall develop written policies and 7 procedures for inmate visiting which shall provide for as many 8 visits and visitors as facility schedules, space, and number of 9 personnel will allow. For sentenced inmates in Type I facilities 10 and all inmates in Type II facilities there shall be allowed no 11 fewer than two visits totaling at least one hour per inmate each 12 week." Id. § 1062.

13 • "The standard issue of clean suitable bedding and linens, for 14 each inmate entering a living area who is expected to remain 15 overnight, shall include ... one serviceable mattress [and]...
16 one freshly laundered or dry cleaned blanket or more depending 17 upon climatic conditions...." Id. § 1270.

18 • "The facility administrator of a Type II or III facility shall 19 develop written policies and procedures which will permit inmates 20 to purchase, receive and read any book, newspaper or periodical 21 accepted for distribution by the United States Postal Service."
22 Id. § 1066(a).

23 • "The visitation policies developed pursuant to this section shall 24 include provision for visitation by minor children of the 25 inmate." Id. § 1062(c).

26 • "The facility administrator shall develop written policies and 27 procedures which allow reasonable access to a telephone...." Id.
28 § 1067.

• "The facility administrator of a Type I, II, III or IV facility shall develop written policies and procedures to provide opportunities for inmates to participate in religious services and counseling on a voluntary basis." Id. § 1072.

There are apparently no state regulations on the minimum hours of sleep to be given to a detainee before and after court, access to dayroom, or minimum holding cell seating.

Although these Title 15 rules are arguably sufficiently mandatory

¹¹ The Orange County jails are a Type II facility. "'Type II facility' means a local detention facility used for the detention of persons pending arraignment, during trial, and upon a sentence of commitment." Cal. Code Regs., Title 15, § 1006.

1 to create liberty interests protectable in a § 1983 action,¹² 2 California jails have a "safety valve" provision, which allows them to 3 temporarily suspend these standards for safety reasons:

4 Nothing contained herein shall be construed to deny 5 the power of any facility administrator to temporarily 6 suspend any standard or requirement herein prescribed 7 in the event of any emergency which threatens the 8 safety of a local detention facility, its inmates or 9 staff, or the public. Only such regulations directly 10 affected by the emergency may be suspended. The 11 facility administrator shall notify the Board of 12 Corrections in writing in the event that such a 13 suspension lasts longer than three days. In no event 14 shall such a suspension continue more than 15 days 15 without the approval of the chairperson of the Board 16 of Corrections for a time specified by him/her.

11 Id. § 1012.

12 In summary, California has enacted a statewide scheme of 13 standards on the significant Stewart issues. These enactments make it 14 apparent the intervention of this federal Court is not required to 15 supervise the operation of California jails. In the absence of a 16 showing to the contrary, it may be assumed California jail 17 professionals will follow the California regulatory scheme and the 18 body of well-developed constitutional law on jail standards.

19 D. The Prison Litigation Reform Act

20 In 1996, Congress passed the Prison Litigation Reform Act, 18 21 U.S.C. § 3626. Under that law, the Court must vacate orders of 22 prospective relief as to jail conditions if the order is over two 23 years old, unless the Court can find a continuing order is necessary 24 to correct a current and ongoing violation of a federal right. 18 25 U.S.C. §§ 3626(b)(1)(A) and 3626(b)(3). The message of the statute is 27 ¹² The Court finds no Ninth Circuit case that has ruled on 28 these specific regulations, and this Court does not rule whether they are separately actionable.

1 clear: federal courts should avoid administering jails unless 2 absolutely necessary.

3 Most of the Stewart orders no longer represent current 4 constitutional standards. They are well over two years old, and the 5 Court cannot find they are necessary to correct a current and ongoing 6 federal right violation. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, the 7 Stewart orders are no longer appropriate and must be vacated.

8 E. DISPOSITION

9 The Court finds the Stewart orders are terminable under current 10 constitutional standards and under the Prison Litigation Reform Act.¹³
11 Therefore, it is now appropriate to vacate the existing Stewart orders 12 and dismiss the Stewart case.

13 The Court does not anticipate that, with removal of the Stewart 14 orders, the constitutional problems addressed there will begin to 15 recur. On the contrary, jail professionals are expected to abide by 16 the state regulatory scheme and the well-developed body of 17 constitutional law on inmates' rights. If violations occur, 18 appropriate remedies exist. However, the minimum standard Stewart 19 orders have outlived their time, and are unnecessary and no longer 20 appropriate.

21 22 ¹³ Defendant County makes the novel argument that, although 23 all Stewart orders are terminable under current constitutional 24 standards and the Prison Litigation Reform Act, and there is no 25 present constitutional violation, nevertheless a population cap 26 should remain in place to protect against future overcrowding, a 27 condition where the Sheriff lacks primary control. The County 28 argues a federal population cap would provide the Sheriff a partial defense against a state court contempt proceeding for prematurely releasing inmates to reduce population and protect against other pressures leading toward overcrowding. These are not the purposes of a federal court order. If no constitutional violation is present or immediately threatened, there is no basis for a federal order.

The Stewart orders are VACATED. This case is DISMISSED.¹⁴

DATED: April 27, 2005

GARY L. TAYLOR
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE
