

NO. 13-16732

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

UNDER SEAL,

PETITIONER-APPELLANT,

v.

ERIC H. HOLDER, JR., Attorney General; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE; and FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,

RESPONDENT-APPELLEES

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California
Case No. 13-cv-1165 SI
Honorable Susan Illston, District Judge

APPELLANT UNDER SEAL'S OPENING BRIEF

Matthew Zimmerman, Esq.
Cindy Cohn, Esq.
David Greene, Esq.
Lee Tien, Esq.
Kurt Opsahl, Esq.
Jennifer Lynch, Esq.
Nathan Cardozo, Esq.
Andrew Crocker, Esq.
ELECTRONIC FRONTIER
FOUNDATION
815 Eddy Street
San Francisco, CA 94109
Telephone: (415) 436-9333
Facsimile: (415) 436-9993

Richard R. Wiebe, Esq.
LAW OFFICE OF RICHARD R.
WIEBE
One California Street, Suite 900
San Francisco, CA 94111
Telephone: (415) 433-3200
Facsimile: (415) 433-6382

Counsel for UNDER SEAL

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Pursuant to Rule 26.1 of the Ninth Circuit Rules of Appellate Procedure, Petitioner-Appellant states that it does not have a parent corporation, and that no publicly held corporation owns 10% or more of its stock.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION 1

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION 2

STATEMENT OF ISSUES 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND 3

 A. Note Regarding This Brief and the Brief Filed in Related Appeal
 Nos. 13-15957/13-16731. 4

 B. Appellant [REDACTED]
 [REDACTED] 5

 C. The District Court’s Decision Granting Another NSL Recipient’s
 Petition in 13-15957..... 6

 D. The District Court’s Decision Denying Appellant’s Petition in 13-
 16732..... 7

 E. The National Security Letter Statutory Framework..... 9

 F. How NSLs Fit into the Panoply of Investigative Tools Available to the FBI and Law Enforcement. 12

 G. The FBI’s History of Using (and Misusing) NSLs. 13

 H. The Second Circuit’s Doe v. Mukasey Decision..... 18

STANDARD OF REVIEW 19

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 19

ARGUMENT 20

I. THE NSL STATUTE’S GAG ORDER PROVISION, SECTION 2709(c), VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT BECAUSE IT LACKS THE PROCEDURES REQUIRED FOR PRIOR RESTRAINTS. 20

A.	The NSL Statute’s Gag Order Provision Authorizes Prior Restraints.	20
B.	The Gag Order Provision Is Unconstitutional Because It Authorizes Prior Restraints Without Including Any of the Procedural Protections Mandated by the First Amendment.	22
1.	The NSL Statute Violates the First Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Neither Assures That Judicial Review of NSL Gags Takes Place Nor Limits Pre-Review Gags to “a Specific Brief Period.”	26
2.	The NSL Statute Violates the Second Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Does Not Assure a Prompt Final Judicial Decision.	27
3.	The NSL Statute Violates the Third Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Does Not Place the Burden of Going to Court and the Burden of Proof on the Government.	29
4.	The Second Circuit and the District Court Agree: Freedman Applies to the NSL Statute, the NSL Statute Conflicts With the First Amendment, and There Is No Possible Constitutional Construction of the NSL Statute.	31
5.	The District Court Properly Invalidated the Nondisclosure Provision.	32
6.	Voluntary Deviations by the FBI from the Procedures Mandated by the NSL Statute Cannot Save the Statute from Unconstitutionality.	33
II.	THE STANDARDS OF JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE NONDISCLOSURE REQUIREMENT IN 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b) ARE EXCESSIVELY DEFERENTIAL AND VIOLATE SEPARATION OF POWERS AND DUE PROCESS.	42
III.	THE NSL STATUTE ALSO FAILS TO SATISFY THE SUBSTANTIVE REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIOR RESTRAINTS.	44

IV.	THE NONDISCLOSURE PROVISION VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT BECAUSE IT IS A CONTENT-BASED RESTRICTION ON SPEECH THAT FAILS STRICT SCRUTINY.....	46
V.	THE NSL STATUTE FAILS TO SET FORTH “NARROW, OBJECTIVE, AND DEFINITE STANDARDS” GUIDING THE DISCRETION OF THE FBI.....	50
VI.	THE GAG ORDERS AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 2709(c) ARE MATERIALLY DIFFERENT FROM PERMISSIBLE GAG ORDERS ISSUED IN OTHER CONTEXTS.	51
VII.	THE UNCONSTITUTIONAL PORTIONS OF THE NSL STATUTE ARE NOT SEVERABLE.	53
	CONCLUSION	56
	STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES.....	57
	CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE	58
	CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE.....	59

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Federal Cases

Alexander v. United States , 509 U.S. 544 (1993)	21
Arnold v. Morton , 529 F.2d 1101 (9th Cir. 1976).....	39
Ayotte v. Planned Parenthood of Northern New England , 546 U.S. 320 (2006)	53
Baby Tam & Co., Inc. v. City of Las Vegas , 154 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. 1998).....	24
Broadrick v. Oklahoma , 413 U.S. 601 (1973)	24
Buckley v. Valeo , 424 U.S. 1 (1976)	54
Butterworth v. Smith , 494 U.S. 624 (1990)	52
City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ'g Co. , 486 U.S. 750 (1988)	38, 39
Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Schor , 478 U.S. 833 (1986)	43
Doe v. Ashcroft , 334 F. Supp. 2d 471 (S.D.N.Y. 2004).....	13, 55
Doe v. Gonzales , 449 F.3d 415 (2d Cir. 2006).....	13
Doe v. Gonzales , 500 F. Supp. 2d 379 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).....	47

Doe v. Mukasey,
549 F.3d 861 (2d Cir. 2008)..... passim

Elrod v. Burns,
427 U.S. 347 (1976)..... 28

Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville,
422 U.S. 205 (1975)..... 38

Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement,
505 U.S. 123 (1992)..... 39, 50

Freedman v. Maryland,
380 U.S. 51 (1965)..... passim

FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas,
493 U.S. 215 (1990)..... 23

Hoye v. City of Oakland,
653 F.3d 835 (9th Cir. 2011)..... 39

In re Nat’l Sec. Letter,
930 F. Supp. 2d 1064 (N.D. Cal. 2013) passim

Internet Specialties W., Inc. v. Milon–DiGiorgio Enters., Inc., 559 F.3d 985 (9th Cir. 2009)..... 19

Landmark Communications v. Virginia,
435 U.S. 829 (1978)..... 43

Lemons v. Bradbury,
538 F.3d 1098 (9th Cir. 2008)..... 19

MacDonald v. Safir,
26 F. Supp. 2d 664 (S.D.N.Y. 1998)..... 24

Marbury v. Madison,
5 U.S. 137 (1803)..... 32

McGehee v. Casey , 718 F.2d 1137 (D.C. Cir 1983)	53
Mistretta v. United States , 488 U.S. 361 (1989)	43
Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius , 132 S. Ct. 2566 (2012)	32
Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stuart , 427 U.S. 539 (1976)	passim
New York Times v. United States , 403 U.S. 713 (1971)	44, 45
Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe , 402 U.S. 415 (1971)	44
Perry v. L.A. Police Dep't , 121 F.3d 1365 (9th Cir. 1997)	48, 49
R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul , 505 U.S. 377 (1992)	46
Reno v. ACLU , 521 U.S. 844 (1997)	47
Sandpiper Village Condominium Ass'n, Inc. v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp. , 428 F.3d 831 (9th Cir. 2005)	19
Santa Monica Food Not Bombs v. Santa Monica , 450 F.3d 1022 (9th Cir. 2006)	38, 39
Seattle Coal. Stop Police Brutality v. City of Seattle , 550 F.3d 788 (9th Cir. 2008)	50
Seattle Times v. Rhinehart , 467 U.S. 20 (1984)	52

Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham,
 394 U.S. 147 (1969)..... 3, 50

Snepp v. United States,
 444 U.S. 507 (1980)..... 53

Texas v. Johnson,
 491 U.S. 397 (1989)..... 48

Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Commission,
 220 F.3d 1134 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc)..... 35

Thomas v. Chicago Park District,
 534 U.S. 316 (2002)..... 23

Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC,
 512 U.S. 622 (1994)..... 48

United States v. Aguilar,
 515 U.S. 593 (1995)..... 49

United States v. Frandsen,
 212 F.3d 1231 (11th Cir. 2000)..... 24

United States v. Fulbright,
 105 F.3d 443 (9th Cir. 1995)..... 49

United States v. Navarro-Vargas,
 408 F.3d 1184 (9th Cir. 2005)..... 53

United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc.,
 529 U.S. 803 (2000)..... 46, 47

United States v. Thirty–Seven (37) Photographs,
 402 U.S. 363 (1971)..... 35

United States v. Windsor,
 133 S. Ct. 2675 (2013)..... 32, 37

Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc.,
455 U.S. 489 (1982)..... 38

Walters v. Reno,
145 F.3d 1032 (9th Cir. 1998)..... 19

Ward v. Rock Against Racism,
491 U.S. 781 (1989)..... 39

Federal Statutes

12 U.S.C. § 3414 10

15 U.S.C. § 1681 10

18 U.S.C. § 2703 12, 41

18 U.S.C. § 2709 passim

18 U.S.C. § 3511 passim

28 U.S.C. § 1291 2

50 U.S.C. § 1861 12

50 U.S.C. § 3162 10

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Const., amend. I..... passim

U.S. Const., amend. V 4

Legislative Materials

S. Rep. No. 99-307 (1986)..... 36, 54, 56

USA PATRIOT ACT Sunset Extension Act of 2011, S. 193, 112th Cong.
(2011) 37

Other Authorities

Department of Justice, Office of Inspector General, A Review of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Use of Exigent Letters and Other Informal Requests for Telephone Records (2010)14, 15, 16

Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, A Review of the FBI's Use of National Security Letters: Assessment of Corrective Actions and Examination of NSL Usage in 2006 (2008)11, 14, 15, 25

Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, A Review of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Use of National Security Letters (2007)11, 14, 15, 16

Liberty and Security in a Changing World: Report and Recommendations from the President's Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies (2013).....13, 16, 17

The Principles, Reform Government Surveillance, <http://www.reformgovernmentsurveillance.com/>17

INTRODUCTION

“The teaching of our cases is that ... only a judicial determination in an adversary proceeding [of the lawfulness of a prior restraint] ensures the necessary sensitivity to freedom of expression...”

Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58 (1965).

The statutes governing National Security Letters (“NSLs”), 18 U.S.C. §§ 2709, 3511 (hereinafter collectively the “NSL statute”), empower the FBI, without prior judicial authorization, to both demand customer records directly from Internet and telecommunication providers and to issue permanent gag orders that prevent the recipients from disclosing anything about the government’s demand.

This unprecedented grant of authority to the FBI is unconstitutional on several grounds. The district court, like the Second Circuit before it, correctly held that the power to issue such gag orders offends the First Amendment because it authorizes the FBI to directly impose content-based prior restraints on speech and then insulates that Executive action from any kind of meaningful judicial review. Similarly, the statute authorizes the FBI to acquire potentially First Amendment protected information from NSL recipients without any obligation for a court to evaluate whether such actions are warranted. Whatever the scope of Congress’ constitutional authority to grant investigatory powers to the FBI, it may not go so far as to effectively prevent both the courts and the individual whose First Amendment rights may be implicated from challenging the FBI's exercise of power.

The district court's decision declining to strike down 18 U.S.C. §§ 2709(c), 3511(b)(2) and (b)(3) as unconstitutional—as it did in No. 13-15957 (also currently before this Court) on the same day that Petitioner-Appellant “Under Seal” (hereafter “Appellant”) filed its own petition—should be reversed and the FBI should be enjoined from the future use of NSLs or the enforcement of NSL gags.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This appeal arises under 18 U.S.C. §§ 2709 and 3511 and the Constitution from a district court decision issued on August 12, 2013, which denied the recipient's petition, brought under 18 U.S.C. § 3511, seeking to set aside a National Security Letter. The NSL recipient filed a timely notice of appeal on August 22, 2013. This Court has appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Whether 18 U.S.C. § 2709(c), which allows the FBI to gag the recipient of a National Security Letter without any judicial determination, violates the First Amendment because it lacks the procedural protections for prior restraints required by Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51 (1965).

2. Whether section 2709(c)'s nondisclosure provision violates the First Amendment because it is a content-based restriction that is not narrowly tailored and does not meet strict scrutiny.
3. Whether the standards of judicial review in 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b) for NSL nondisclosure orders are excessively deferential and therefore violate separation of powers and due process.
4. Whether section 2709(c) violates the First Amendment because it authorizes the issuance of prior restraints that are not necessary to further a governmental interest of the highest magnitude. See Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 562 (1976).
5. Whether section 2709(c) violates the First Amendment because it fails to set forth narrow, objective and definite standards guiding the FBI's discretion as required by Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147 (1969).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

This is an appeal of the district court's denial of Appellant's petition to set aside National Security letters issued to it by the FBI. In response to an earlier action brought by a separate NSL recipient—whose consolidated appeals of two separate challenges are being briefed on a similar parallel briefing schedule with this one (see Under Seal v. Holder, Nos. 13-15957 and 13-16731 (9th Cir.))—the district court struck down the NSL statute as facially unconstitutional, staying enforcement of its order pending appeal. In re Nat'l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d 1064 (N.D. Cal. 2013). In the immediate case, the same district court denied a similar petition, with the district court opting to defer future rulings on the facial unconstitutionality of the NSL statute until this Court had reviewed its initial decision. ER 2-4.

A. Note Regarding This Brief and the Brief Filed in Related Appeal Nos. 13-15957/13-16731.

Also filed today is the opening appellate brief in related appeals No. 13-15957 and 13-16731, filed by undersigned counsel on behalf of another NSL recipient who brought a similar challenge to the same NSL statute. While the cases raise most of the same issues (and would ordinarily be consolidated with this one), the challenged NSL provisions at issue also prevent the respective petitioners from learning each other's identity or any information about their respective cases; for similar reasons, the government has not consented to the filing of a combined brief. Accordingly, to streamline the process as best possible, undersigned counsel is today filing nearly identical briefs on behalf of each client but separately and under seal in each case. The only material differences between the briefs, aside from the discussion of each petitioner's specific facts and procedural history, is that Appellee in 13-15957/13-16731 additionally affirmatively challenges the NSL "compelled production" authority on First and Fifth Amendment grounds and defends the scope of the injunction issued by the district court. See Appellant's Opening Brief in Nos. 13-15957/13-16731 at 53-58, 61-65.

B. Appellant

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

[Redacted]

Appellant believes that it should ensure that any request for information about its customers fully meets both statutory and constitutional standards. Id. As transparency is a core concern for both Appellant and its customers, it is vital to Appellant that government requests for data be disclosed to customers and discussed in the public debate, and that in the rare situations where a gag may be appropriate, that courts play their necessary and discerning oversight role to ensure that First Amendment and other rights are adequately protected. Id.

C. The District Court’s Decision Granting Another NSL Recipient’s Petition in 13-15957.

In 2011, a separate NSL recipient received a National Security Letter from the FBI directing Appellant “to provide to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) all subscriber information, limited to name, address, and length of service, for all services provided to or accounts held by the named subscriber and/or subscriber of the named account” (the “15957 NSL”). On March 14, 2013, the district court granted the recipient’s petition to set aside the 15957 NSL declaring the statute to be facially unconstitutional. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1074-75. The court held that the gag provision of the statute was unconstitutional because it failed to comport with the prior restraint procedural safeguards identified by the Supreme Court in Freedman v. Maryland by failing to require the government to initiate judicial review promptly. Id. The district court also found that the FBI’s gag authority under the statute was a content-based restriction that failed strict scrutiny as “the government has not shown that it is generally necessary to prohibit recipients from disclosing the mere fact of their receipt of NSLs,” id., and “because [the review provisions] ensure that nondisclosure continues longer than necessary to serve the national security interests at stake,” id. at 1076. Third, the court struck down the statutorily mandated standard of review of the gag provision found in 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b) and (c) on separation of powers and First Amendment grounds, holding that “the statute impermissibly attempts to circumscribe a court’s ability to review the necessity of nondisclosure orders.” Id. at 1077. Fourth, the court found that the gag provision was not severable from the statute and that therefore both the gag authority and the underlying authority to issue NSLs must be struck down. Id. at 1081. The court ultimately enjoined the government “from issuing NSLs under § 2709 or from enforcing the nondisclosure provision in this or any other case,” staying the injunction pending this appeal. Id.

D. The District Court’s Decision Denying Appellant’s Petition in 13-16732.

On [REDACTED] 2013, Appellant received two National Security Letters, the [REDACTED] NSLs. ER 10. Each NSL explicitly invoked the section 2709 as the source of its authority for the FBI to issue both the NSL itself and the nondisclosure requirement. ER 50-54, 56-60. The NSL also informed

Appellant that it had a right to challenge the nondisclosure requirement. Id. The NSLs each specifically stated:

If you wish to make a disclosure that is prohibited by the nondisclosure requirement, you must notify the FBI, in writing, of your desire to do so within 10 calendar days of receipt of this letter. That notice must be mailed or faxed to the [respective FBI division] with a copy to FBI HQ, attention: General Counsel (fax number: 202-324-5366) and must reference the date of the NSL and the identification number found on the upper left corner of the NSL. If you send notice within 10 calendar days, the FBI will initiate judicial proceedings in approximately 30 days in order to demonstrate to a federal judge the need for nondisclosure and to obtain a judicial order requiring continued nondisclosure. The nondisclosure requirement will remain in effect unless and until there is a final court order holding that disclosure is permitted.

Id.

The NSLs prohibit Appellant from disclosing information about them to affected customers, to most of its employees and staff, to the press, to members of the public, and to members of Congress. It likewise prohibits Appellant from engaging in any kind of public criticism about this controversial FBI power, including that it has challenged the legality of that power in court.¹

On March 14, 2013, in the related case now on appeal as No. 13-15957, the district court ruled on a petition by a different NSL recipient and struck down the ¹ The FBI subsequently withdrew the information demand portion of the [REDACTED] NSL but retained the associated nondisclosure requirement. ER 11. Appellant here appeals the district court's order enforcing the nondisclosure requirements for both NSLs and the information demand portion of the [REDACTED] NSL.

NSL statute as facially unconstitutional. ER 12. That same day, Appellant filed its own petition before the same district court and sought to set aside the NSLs it had received. ER 11. Appellant challenged the NSL gag authority on similar First Amendment substantive and procedural grounds. Appellant also challenged the FBI's NSL compelled production authority based on the non-severability of the NSL statute. The government cross-moved to enforce the NSLs on March 26, 2013. ER 68.

The district court, proceeding with caution, abstained from applying its prior ruling to Appellant's new petition, stating: "Whether the challenged nondisclosure provisions are, in fact, facially unconstitutional will be determined in due course by the Ninth Circuit." ER 12. The Court denied Appellant's petition and granted the government's cross-petition to enforce the NSLs. ER 14.

E. The National Security Letter Statutory Framework.

The NSL statute invoked here (18 U.S.C. § 2709), and NSL statutes generally, are relatively recent legislative creations that grant the FBI unprecedented powers to obtain on its own, in secret and without any prior judicial oversight, customer records as part of international terrorism and counterintelligence investigations.

The first NSL statutes were passed in 1986, authorizing the compelled disclosure of bank customer records (as part of the Right to Financial Privacy Act (RFPA)) and records regarding telecommunications subscribers (as part of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA)). See 12 U.S.C. § 3414(a)(5)(A) (1986); 18 U.S.C. § 2709 (1986). Today, five statutory provisions authorize the FBI to issue NSLs to a range of recipients to obtain a variety of types of user information.²

Section 2709 grants two primary powers to the FBI: (1) authority on the FBI's own certification to compel the production of certain customer information it decides is relevant to a national security investigation; and (2) authority to directly impose indefinite gags on NSL recipients, preventing them from publicly disclosing anything about the NSL, even that they have received one. Both powers are currently exercised without any mandatory court oversight, with only limited oversight coming if an NSL recipient—i.e., the service provider and not the target—petitions a district court for review.

Prior to the passage of the USA PATRIOT Act in 2001, NSL statutory authority, while still suffering from the fundamental infirmities discussed here, was relatively limited in scope, only allowing issuance by senior FBI officials and only upon a self-certification that: “there are specific and articulable facts giving reason to believe that the person or entity to whom the information sought pertains is a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power” 18 U.S.C. § 2709(b) (1996).

² See 18 U.S.C. § 2709 (telecommunications providers), 12 U.S.C. § 3414 (financial institutions), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1681u, v (consumer credit agencies), and 50 U.S.C. § 3162 (financial institutions, consumer credit agencies, travel agencies).

Section 505 of the PATRIOT Act, however, significantly broadened the NSL statute. First, NSLs could be issued by a Special Agent in Charge of any FBI field office. 18 U.S.C. § 2709(b) (2001). Second, rather than being available for the compelled production of records related to foreign powers or their agents, the revised statute allows the collection of any records “relevant to an authorized investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.” Id. Third, instead of self-certifying that “specific and articulable” facts exist, the Special Agent need only self-certify that the information is “relevant” to an authorized investigation. *Id.*³

No explicit statutory mechanism by which a recipient could challenge the FBI’s NSL authority existed until the NSL statutes were amended in 2006. Newly-added 18 U.S.C. § 3511(a) authorized petitions by NSL recipients to modify or set aside an underlying request for records under section 2709 “if compliance would be unreasonable, oppressive, or otherwise unlawful.” 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b) authorizes petitions to modify or set aside a gag under section 2709 under certain conditions and under a standard requiring deference to the FBI’s certifications. The right to challenge the scope of a section 2709 gag as articulated in section 3511(b) is conditional, imposing timing limitations about when such challenges can be brought as well as the degree of deference that must be given to FBI certifications. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 3511(b)(2), (3).

³ Not surprisingly, FBI NSL demands surged from about 8,500 NSL requests in 2000, the year before NSL requirements were loosened by the USA PATRIOT Act, to more than 56,000 NSL requests in 2004 alone. Between 2003 and 2006, the FBI issued a total of 191,180 NSL requests. By 2006, 60% of these requests related to investigations of U.S. persons, and “the overwhelming majority” sought telephone billing records, electronic and phone subscriber information, and electronic communications transactional records. Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, A Review of the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s Use of National Security Letters 120 (2007), available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/oig/special/s0703b/final.pdf> (“2007 OIG Report”); Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, A Review of the FBI’s Use of National Security Letters: Assessment of Corrective Actions and Examination of NSL Usage in 2006 107-108 (2008), available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/oig/special/s0803b/final.pdf> (“2008 OIG Report”).

F. How NSLs Fit into the Panoply of Investigative Tools Available to the FBI and Law Enforcement.

The FBI and other law enforcement and intelligence officials have a broad range of alternative investigative tools permitting them to obtain the same records the FBI sought here, such as grand jury subpoenas, court orders under 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d), administrative subpoenas, criminal trial subpoenas, and (as the government maintains) orders issued under Section 215 of the PATRIOT Act, 50 U.S.C. § 1861. Indeed, the government has demonstrated the viability of such alternatives already, as discussed below at 41.

The fundamental difference between NSLs and these alternatives is that “NSLs such as the ones authorized by § 2709 provide fewer procedural protections to the recipient than any other information-gathering technique the Government employs to procure [similar] information” Doe v. Ashcroft, 334 F. Supp. 2d 471, 484-491 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (describing in detail the structural differences between NSLs and other processes), vacated sub nom. Doe v. Gonzales, 449 F.3d 415 (2d Cir. 2006). See also Liberty and Security in a Changing World: Report and Recommendations from the President’s Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies 91-93 (2013) (“President’s Review Grp.”)⁴ (noting that other investigative tools have independent judicial check and/or allow a target to challenge them in court). Of all similar investigatory tools relied upon by the FBI to investigate criminal and national security-related matters by means of obtaining customer records from third party intermediaries, NSL statutes alone create a process whereby the Executive can self-issue both demands for customer information and accompanying nondisclosure requirements without any prior judicial involvement or giving the ultimate target of an investigation the ability to contest the underlying information request him or herself.

G. The FBI’s History of Using (and Misusing) NSLs.

Appellant’s concern about the NSL statute’s inclusion of a permanent, extrajudicial gag is based in part on the well-documented history of FBI abuse of NSLs. As part of the reauthorization of the USA PATRIOT Act in 2006, Congress directed the Department of Justice Inspector General (“IG”) to investigate and report on the FBI's use of NSLs. In three reports issued between 2007 and 2010, the IG documented the agency's systematic and extensive misuse of NSLs.⁵ The Inspector General concluded that, left to itself to ensure that legal limits were respected, "the FBI used NSLs in violation of applicable NSL statutes, Attorney General Guidelines, and internal FBI policies." 2007 OIG Report 124.

⁴ Available at http://www.whitehouse.gov/sites/default/files/docs/2013-12-12_rg_final_report.pdf.

The IG reports and Congressional testimony demonstrated severe, and largely unreported, problems:

- Between 2003 and 2006, the FBI's intelligence violations included improperly authorized NSLs, factual misstatements in the NSLs, improper requests under NSL statutes, and unauthorized information collection through NSLs. 2007 OIG Report 66-67; 2008 OIG Report 138-143; 2010 OIG Report 2-4.

- The FBI's improper practices included requests for information based on First Amendment protected activity. 2010 OIG Report 6, 89-122.

- The FBI has used "after-the-fact," blanket NSLs to "cover" original, informal, and indeed illegal requests for information. The OIG noted these blanket NSLs did "not cure any prior violations" and were "ill-conceived, legally deficient, contrary to FBI policy, and poorly executed." 2010 OIG Report 168, 184.

⁵ 2007 OIG Report; 2008 OIG Report; Department of Justice, Office of Inspector General, A Review of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Use of Exigent Letters and Other Informal Requests for Telephone Records (2010), available at <http://www.justice.gov/oig/special/s1001r.pdf> ("2010 OIG Report").

- Despite a requirement to report all violations, the OIG’s review of 2003-05 investigative files at four FBI field offices revealed that 22% contained one or more possible violations that had never been reported, representing an overall possible violation rate of 7.5 percent. 2007 OIG Report 78, 84; 2008 OIG Report 76.

- The FBI issued hundreds of NSLs for “community of interest” or “calling circle” information to obtain multiple toll records in response to an individual NSL without the knowledge or approval of authorized NSL signers and without any determination that the telephone numbers were relevant to authorized national security investigations. 2010 OIG Report at 60, 75-76. Between 2004 and 2009, this method was used to review 10,070 telephone numbers at a single communications service provider. Id. at 61.

- Between March 11, 2003, and December 16, 2005, at least 739 NSLs—requesting approximately 3,000 telephone numbers—were signed by unauthorized personnel. 2010 OIG Report 2.

- After violations had been brought to the FBI’s attention, the IG expressed concern that the FBI’s attitude toward these matters “diminishes their seriousness and fosters a perception that compliance with FBI policies governing the FBI’s use of its NSL authorities is annoying paperwork.” 2008 OIG Report 100.

- The OIG reports linked much of the FBI's NSL abuse problem to a lack of oversight, both outside and within the agency. 2010 OIG Report 213-14, 219, 279-85. The OIG determined in 2007 that the FBI failed to report as required nearly 4,600 NSL requests to Congress between 2003 and 2005, almost all of which were issued under section 2709. 2007 OIG Report 33.

- The OIG reports indicate that telecommunications employees who processed NSLs did not request separate legal process for community-of-interest records requests, the scope of which expanded exponentially to include people with whom contacts of targets were themselves in contact. 2010 OIG Report 59. The reports also indicate that in over half of all NSL violations submitted to the Intelligence Oversight Board, the NSL recipient either provided more information than requested or turned over information without receiving a valid legal justification from the FBI. Id. at 70.

The FBI's NSL practices continue to be of matter of public concern. In December 2013, the President's Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies noted that the FBI continues to issue an average of 60 NSLs per day. See President's Review Grp. at 93. The Review Group recommended several limitations on the Bureau's NSL authority to better protect the privacy and civil liberties of Americans. These included restrictions on the issuance of and application of the non-disclosure provision of NSLs; a requirement for judicial approval prior to the issuance of an NSL, absent “genuine emergency;” and public reporting—both by the government and NSL recipients—of the number of requests made, the type of information produced, and the number of individuals whose records have been requested. Id. at 26, 92-93, 122-23, 128.

A wide and growing range of telecommunications and technology companies have echoed the concerns of the Review Group,⁶ indicating a growing frustration at their inability to communicate to their customers how often the government orders it to disclose customer information and on what legal basis.⁷

In its opening brief in No. 13-15957, the government asserted that it has “scrupulously” followed the suggestions for self-imposed restrictions outlined by the Second Circuit in Doe v. Mukasey, 549 F.3d 861 (2d Cir. 2008), since that decision was issued, and that the statutory requirement of FBI self-certification “ensures that these nondisclosure requirements are not being imposed unnecessarily.” Government’s Opening Brief at 21, 41-42, Under Seal v. Holder, No. 13-15957 (9th Cir. January 17, 2014) (“Gov. Brief”). However, the government has not presented any evidence to support its contention about the “necessity” of NSLs it issued since the Mukasey decision or their legality and no subsequent independent investigation of the FBI’s use of NSLs has occurred.

⁶ See, e.g., The Principles, Reform Government Surveillance, <http://www.reformgovernmentsurveillance.com/> (coalition formed by AOL, Apple, Facebook, Google, LinkedIn, Microsoft, Twitter, and Yahoo calling on the government to “allow companies to publish the number and nature of government demands for user information”).

⁷ In response to petitions in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (“FISA Ct” or “FISC”) by several technology companies, the Justice Department recently announced a voluntary agreement that will allow these “and other similarly situated companies” to report either (1) the number of NSLs they have received in bands of 1000, starting with 0-999 or (2) the number of all “national security process [sic] received” in bands of 250, starting with 0-249. See Gov. Notice, Nos. Misc 13-03, 13-04, 13-05, 13-06, 13-07 (FISA Ct. Jan. 27, 2014), available at <http://www.uscourts.gov/uscourts/courts/fisc/misc-13-03-04-05-06-07-notice-140127.pdf>.

H. The Second Circuit’s Doe v. Mukasey Decision.

The district court’s conclusion in 13-15957 that the NSL statute is unconstitutional is in fact in agreement with the Second Circuit’s similar conclusion in Doe v. Mukasey, the only decision in which a circuit court has considered the constitutionality of the NSL statute. The Mukasey court first found that the gag order provisions constituted prior restraints, although not of the “typical” variety, and were content based. Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 876. Second, the Mukasey court determined that the NSL statute was subject to the procedural requirements of Freedman v. Maryland and that the statute failed to satisfy those requirements because it does not obligate the government to initiate government review of NSL nondisclosure orders. Id. at 877-81. The Mukasey court also noted that (unlike in this case) “the Government has conceded that strict scrutiny is the applicable standard.” Id. at 878. Finally, like the district court here, the Mukasey court held that the statutory standards of review “are unconstitutional to the extent that, upon such review, a governmental official’s certification that disclosure may endanger the national security of the United States or interfere with diplomatic relations is treated as conclusive.” Id. at 884. As discussed further below, the Mukasey court went on to include an advisory opinion about whether future hypothetical changes in government conduct might remedy the statute’s unconstitutionality, a proposal which the district court here rejected. But the Second Circuit unequivocally concluded that the nondisclosure provisions of NSL statute as currently written are unconstitutional.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

This Court’s review of a district court’s ruling on a permanent injunction involves analysis of “factual, legal, and discretionary components.” Walters v. Reno, 145 F.3d 1032, 1047 (9th Cir. 1998). Factual findings are reviewed for “clear error.” Lemons v. Bradbury, 538 F.3d 1098, 1102 (9th Cir. 2008). Legal conclusions are reviewed de novo. Sandpiper Village Condominium Ass’n, Inc. v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 428 F.3d 831, 840 (9th Cir. 2005). A district court’s decision to grant a permanent injunction is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Internet Specialties W., Inc. v. Milon–DiGiorgio Enters., Inc., 559 F.3d 985, 993 (9th Cir. 2009).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The district court’s judgment decision in No. 13-15957 finding the NSL statute unconstitutional was correct. The NSL gag orders are unconstitutional prior restraints on speech that meet neither the procedural nor substantive requirements mandated by the First Amendment. Specifically, the district court was correct in declaring the statute to be facially unconstitutional and non-severable. It also correctly determined that the statute improperly constrained the appropriate judicial review standard. The district court was also correct in determining that the facial constitutional deficiencies in the NSL process could not be cured by a voluntary “reciprocal notice” procedure as the statute did not require it; in any event, the voluntary procedure still would not solve the First Amendment procedural flaws in the statute. Moreover, the district court’s subsequent inconsistent decision in this case to forego applying its prior holding that the NSL statute is facially unconstitutional cannot be sustained. This Court should reverse the district court’s holding on appeal here and enjoin the FBI from issuing future NSLs or enforcing any NSL gag order.

ARGUMENT

I. THE NSL STATUTE’S GAG ORDER PROVISION, SECTION 2709(c), VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT BECAUSE IT LACKS THE PROCEDURES REQUIRED FOR PRIOR RESTRAINTS.

A. The NSL Statute’s Gag Order Provision Authorizes Prior Restraints.

A prior restraint on free speech is “the most serious and the least tolerable infringement on First Amendment rights.” Nebraska Press Ass’n, 427 U.S. at 559.

For this reason, the Supreme Court has imposed stringent procedural and substantive restrictions on them.

The statute's gag order provision authorizes the government to prevent NSL recipients from disclosing that they have received an NSL or anything about their interaction with the government. Because the statute prevents recipients from speaking in the first instance rather than imposing a penalty after they have spoken, the gags are prior restraints. Alexander v. United States, 509 U.S. 544, 550 (1993) (“The term prior restraint is used ‘to describe administrative and judicial orders forbidding certain communications when issued in advance of the time that such communications are to occur.’ . . . [O]rders that actually forbid speech activities . . . are classic examples of prior restraints.”) (citation omitted, emphasis original).

The government argues that the gag orders are not prior restraints but “are instead, a common type of regulation that subjects a very narrow type of disclosure to sanction after the fact.” Gov. Brief at 49. The government is wrong. The statute explicitly authorizes the FBI to require that an NSL recipient not speak. 18 U.S.C. § 2709(c)(1) (“no [NSL recipient] . . . shall disclose . . . that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has sought or obtained access to information or records under this section”); see also In re Nat'l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1071; Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 876. Thus, although the NSL gag orders allow for punishment “after the fact,” they undeniably take effect before the act of speaking, which is the touchstone in assessing whether a penalty on speech is a prior restraint. Indeed, the NSL issued to Appellant clearly states that “Title 18 U.S.C. § 2709(c) (1) and (2) prohibits you, or any officer, employee, or agent of yours, from disclosing this letter” ER 51.

Gag orders are routinely treated as prior restraints. See, e.g., Nebraska Press, 427 U.S. at 529 (analyzing temporary gag order for purposes of empanelling a jury to be a prior restraint). Accordingly, prior restraints authorized by section 2709(c) must satisfy both the procedural and substantive requirements mandated by the First Amendment. They satisfy neither.

B. The Gag Order Provision Is Unconstitutional Because It Authorizes Prior Restraints Without Including Any of the Procedural Protections Mandated by the First Amendment.

The district court in 13-15957 correctly held that section 2709(c) lacks the procedural protections required of prior restraints set forth by the Supreme Court in Freedman v. Maryland and is thus facially unconstitutional. See In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1074-75. In Freedman v. Maryland, the Supreme Court stated that any administrative scheme to require governmental permission before one can speak must have built into it three core procedural protections that emphasize the necessity of judicial review: (1) any restraint imposed prior to judicial review must be limited to “a specified brief period”; (2) any restraint prior to a final judicial determination must be limited to “the shortest fixed period compatible with sound judicial resolution”; and (3) the burden of going to court to suppress speech and the burden of proof in court must be placed on the government. Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58-59.

Thus a statute must obligate the government to seek court approval for any administratively-imposed gag order, it must obligate the government to do so promptly if it wants the gag to be in effect prior to judicial review, and it must guarantee that the court will issue a final determination promptly. Id.; see also Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 879; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 227 (1990); Thomas v. Chicago Park District, 534 U.S. 316, 321 (2002).

Every court that has evaluated the NSL statute has faulted it for failing to satisfy the Freedman procedures, including the Second Circuit in Doe v. Mukasey. Specifically, the Second Circuit determined that by allowing the executive branch to unilaterally gag NSL recipients “who had no interaction with the Government until the Government imposed its nondisclosure requirement upon it,” the NSL statute must meet the procedural requirements set forth in Freedman v. Maryland. Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 877-81. The district court here independently reached the same conclusion. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1073-74.

The government’s arguments that Freedman does not apply and that the statute may be upheld even if its requirements are not met are incorrect. The government first fundamentally misconstrues the nature of the Supreme Court’s Freedman holding, confusing the impact of a statute failing to comply with the Freedman procedural requirements with the separate approach to evaluating overbreadth challenges. See Gov. Brief at 44-48. In order to make a facial challenge, a Freedman challenger need not demonstrate that there “are no conceivable set of facts where the application of the particular government regulation might or would be constitutional,” United States v. Frandsen, 212 F.3d 1231, 1236 (11th Cir. 2000) (citing Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58-60), but rather that the statute lacks “adequate procedural safeguards necessary to ensure against undue suppression of protected speech.” Baby Tam & Co., Inc. v. City of Las Vegas, 154 F.3d 1097, 1100 (9th Cir. 1998); see also MacDonald v. Safir, 26 F. Supp. 2d 664, 674 n.14 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (noting that the overbreadth analysis established in Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973) and its progeny “is simply not an accurate statement of the law with respect to Freedman challenges.”). The Freedman procedural requirements are binary—they either exist on a statute’s face or they do not—and their absence cannot be cured through case-by-case analysis and by voluntary compliance with nonstatutory limitations.

The government can cite no authority to support its novel Freedman contention—that a prior restraint statute that fails to incorporate the Freedman requirements can be upheld because challengers cannot additionally satisfy the burdens of an overbreadth challenge—because no other such authority exists. This is because the Freedman Court was concerned about different harms than overbreadth, chiefly ensuring the prompt, affirmative role of the judiciary when administrative prior restraints are threatened. Indeed, Freedman itself directly contradicts the government’s argument. The Freedman Court explicitly stated that the procedural requirements it articulated were separate from and in addition to those related to First Amendment overbreadth challenges: “[W]e have no occasion to decide whether the vice of overbreadth infects the Maryland statute” Freedman, 380 U.S. at 56. Notwithstanding the fact that the Maryland statute was not found to be overbroad, the Freedman Court struck it down based on its failure to include the necessary procedural requirements.

The government next makes the unsupportable claim that Freedman does not apply because the concerns underlying other speech licensing schemes are not present here. Gov. Brief. at 48-51. The government claims that, unlike the government film evaluators in Freedman, the FBI is not biased toward issuing gag orders. But the OIG reports indicate that the FBI issues gag orders nearly 97% of the time it issued NSLs. 2008 OIG Report 124. And throughout its brief the government acknowledges that most of its investigations “must be carried out in secrecy if they are to succeed.” Gov. Brief at 8. See also, e.g., ER 103 (Redacted, Unclassified Declaration of FBI Assistant Director Mark F. Giuliano (“Giuliano Decl.”) ¶ 9). Clearly, the FBI prefers secrecy. And although there are occasions in which such secrecy may be required, in order to ensure that the FBI’s preference is not substituted for an actual need for secrecy in each case where it imposes a gag, Freedman requires that nondisclosure decision not be the FBI’s alone.

The government finally asserts that Freedman does not apply because the gag the FBI issues only reaches “information provided by the Government.” Gov. Brief at 50. This is false: the gag prevents the recipient from discussing more than the fact of the NSL; it cannot describe its own experience in receiving and responding to the NSL, and its objections to that experience. But, even if it were true that the gag only reached information provided in the NSL itself, this would be irrelevant. Unlike the cases in which Freedman has been found inapplicable, as both the district court and the Mukasey court observed, the gag prevents the NSL recipient from discussing a circumstance that has been thrust upon it unwillingly. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1071-72; Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 877.

The Freedman requirements apply in full to the NSL statute.

1. The NSL Statute Violates the First Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Neither Assures That Judicial Review of NSL Gags Takes Place Nor Limits Pre-Review Gags to “a Specific Brief Period.”

The gag order scheme fails Freedman’s first prong—that any restraint imposed prior to judicial review must be limited to “a specified brief period, to either issue a license or go to court to restrain” the speech in question. 380 U.S.

at 59. This limitation is important because without it the government can use the unlimited duration of the gag to effectively avoid judicial review by imposing the burden of seeking judicial review on the recipient.

The NSL statute permits an imposition of a gag of indefinite duration, with no requirement whatsoever that the government ever seek court approval, something the government concedes. Gov. Brief at 53 (“this latter mechanism is not contained within the four corners of the statute”). This is inconsistent with the Freedman Court’s admonition that a potential speaker must be “assured” by the statute that a censor “will, within a specified brief period, either issue a license or go to court to restrain” the speech at issue is wholly absent from the NSL statute. Freedman, 380 U.S. at 59 (emphasis added). See also In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1073.

2. The NSL Statute Violates the Second Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Does Not Assure a Prompt Final Judicial Decision.

The gag order scheme also fails Freedman’s second prong—that the scheme in question “must . . . assure a prompt final judicial decision.” Freedman, 380 U.S. at 59. This second requirement reflects the Supreme Court’s concern that “unduly onerous” procedural requirements that drive up the time, cost, and uncertainty of judicial review of speech licensing schemes discourage the exercise of protected First Amendment rights. Id. at 58.

A lengthy and protracted process of judicial determination, which leaves the gag order in place in the interim and potentially comes after the value of speaking about the issues gagged has diminished, “would lend an effect of finality to the censor’s determination” that the gag order is valid. Id. As the Supreme Court has recognized in a variety of contexts, the deprivation of First Amendment rights, for even a limited period of time, causes a significant constitutional injury. See Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976).

The Supreme Court has not specified precisely how quickly a final judicial decision must come, but it did conclude that it had to be more quickly than the four months for an initial judicial review and six months for appellate review as had occurred in Freedman. 380 U.S. at 55, 61. By contrast, in No. 13-15957, with no statutory limitations to the contrary, the district court issued its opinion over 15 months after the hearing on the petition. Moreover, notwithstanding that order, the gag there remains in effect, 34 months and counting since the filing of its petition. Similarly, in Appellant’s case here, the district court issued its opinion nearly five months after its petition was filed. Whatever constitutes the outer counters of a “prompt” final judicial determination, such limits must be both brief and finite. The NSL statute provides neither.⁸

⁸ The Second Circuit in Mukasey properly recognized that the NSL statute did not contain any such limitation and opined that to be constitutional any judicial

3. The NSL Statute Violates the Third Prong of the Freedman Test Because It Does Not Place the Burden of Going to Court and the Burden of Proof on the Government.

The NSL statute also violates the third Freedman prong—that “the burden of going to court to suppress speech and the burden of proof in court must be placed on the government”—in two ways. See Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 871 (citing Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58-59).

First, instead of requiring the government to go to court to seek permission to suppress speech, section 2709(c) requires the recipient of an NSL to initiate judicial review by petitioning for an order modifying or setting aside the nondisclosure requirement. 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b).

Second, the NSL statute fails to place the burden of justifying the need for the gag order on the government when the matter is actually brought to court; indeed, the statute deprives that court of any meaningful authority to exercise its constitutional oversight duties. Instead, a court may only modify the nondisclosure requirement if it finds there is “no reason to believe that disclosure may endanger the national security of the United States, interfere with a[n] . . . investigation, interfere with diplomatic relations, or endanger the life or physical safety of any person.” 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b)(2). And where senior FBI or DOJ officials certify the need for the gag order, the court has even less discretion: a court is not proceeding evaluating the appropriateness of an NSL “would have to be concluded within a prescribed time, perhaps 60 days.” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 879.

permitted to evaluate the facts, but instead is required to blindly accept the FBI's representations.⁹

As the district court held in 13-15957, these attempts to shift the burden to the NSL recipient violates the third Freedman prong. In re Nat'l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1077 (“as written, the statute impermissibly attempts to circumscribe a court’s ability to review the necessity of nondisclosure orders.”); see also Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 883.

That the statute allows for the recipient to initiate judicial review in some situations thus does not cure this defect, contrary to the government’s assertion. See Gov. Brief at 52. One of the Supreme Court’s explicit goals behind imposing the Freedman requirements was to counteract the self-censorship that occurs when would-be speakers are unwilling or unable to initiate judicial review themselves. Freedman, 380 U.S. at 59.

⁹ If, at the time of the petition, the FBI “certifies that disclosure may endanger the national security of the United States or interfere with diplomatic relations, such certification shall be treated as conclusive unless the court finds that the certification was made in bad faith.” 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b)(2). There is no procedure for factual review by a court wherein the court could even determine whether such certification was made in bad faith.

4. The Second Circuit and the District Court Agree: Freedman Applies to the NSL Statute, the NSL Statute Conflicts With the First Amendment, and There Is No Possible Constitutional Construction of the NSL Statute.

There is no conflict between the statutory and constitutional interpretation of the district court in 13-15957 and the Second Circuit in Mukasey regarding the nondisclosure provision, only a disagreement on the question of remedy. Both courts concluded that the Freedman standard governs the NSL statute, that the NSL statute conflicts with the First Amendment because it violates the third Freedman prong, and that there was no limiting construction of the NSL statute that could save it.

Importantly, the Second Circuit was unequivocal that there was no possible construction that could save the nondisclosure provision of the NSL statute: “We deem it beyond the authority of a court to ‘interpret’ or ‘revise’ the NSL statutes to create the constitutionally required obligation of the Government to initiate judicial review of a nondisclosure requirement.” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 883. Thus, the government misreads Mukasey when it asserts that the Second Circuit “found that the provisions [i.e., sections 2709(c) and 3511(b)] are also susceptible to a different reasonable interpretation that renders them constitutional.” Gov. Brief at 24.

The district court in 13-15957 agreed with the Second Circuit’s view of section 2709(c): “The statutory provisions at issue—as written, adopted and amended by Congress in the face of a constitutional challenge—are not susceptible to narrowing or conforming constructions to save their constitutionality.” In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1080. That conclusion is correct because, as the court noted, the “multiple inferences required to save the provisions at issue are not only contrary to evidence of Congressional intent, but also contrary to the statutory language and structure of the statutory provisions actually enacted by Congress.” Id.

5. The District Court Properly Invalidated the Nondisclosure Provision.

Because the nondisclosure provision is unconstitutional, the district court had no choice but to invalidate them. This rule is as old as Marbury v. Madison and its application is as recent as the Supreme Court’s invalidation of the Defense of Marriage Act and its partial invalidation of the Affordable Care Act. “[A] law repugnant to the constitution is void.” Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 180 (1803). “[T]here can be no question that it is the responsibility of this Court to enforce the limits on federal power by striking down acts of Congress that transgress those limits.” Nat’l Fed’n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 132 S. Ct. 2566, 2579-80 (2012) (citing Marbury); see United States v. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675 (2013) (invalidating Defense of Marriage Act).

The district court followed its constitutional duty and declared the nondisclosure provision unconstitutional in No. 13-15957. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1067. However, its failure to do so again in No. 13-16731 must, for these same reasons, be reversed.

6. Voluntary Deviations by the FBI from the Procedures Mandated by the NSL Statute Cannot Save the Statute from Unconstitutionality.

The government contends that it has cured the unconstitutionality of the nondisclosure provisions of the NSL statute by adopting new notice procedures for NSLs—procedures that are not required by the NSL statute. This contention lacks merit and should be rejected.

First, critically, even if the voluntary adoption of the Mukasey's court's suggested reciprocal notice procedure was appropriate (which it is not), it could not cure the statute's unconstitutionality because it still fails the Freedman requirements. Not only does the reciprocal notice process still not mandate that the FBI obtain a judicial evaluation of its NSL gags, the proposed process does nothing to ensure prompt judicial review and thereby cabin the length of a challenged gag, a failure highlighted by (in No. 13-15957) the nearly two-year delay between Appellant's initial filing and the district court's eventual decision to strike down the statute and set the NSL aside and the similar five month delay here.

In any event, even if the voluntarily-adopted procedures in some way mitigated the constitutional shortcomings, the government is incorrect in suggesting that such non-statutory limitations can be grafted onto the NSL process. The Mukasey court, as noted, held that it was “beyond the authority of a court to ‘interpret’ or ‘revise’ the NSL statutes to create the constitutionally required obligation of the Government to initiate judicial review of a nondisclosure requirement.” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 883. But after concluding that no saving construction was possible, it went on to speculate in dicta that if the government were to change its practices and adopt a hypothetical “reciprocal-notice” provision, that “perhaps” would mitigate the unconstitutionality of the statute:

The Government could inform each NSL recipient that it should give the Government prompt notice, perhaps within ten days, in the event that the recipient wishes to contest the nondisclosure requirement. Upon receipt of such notice, the Government could be accorded a limited time, perhaps 30 days, to initiate a judicial review proceeding to maintain the nondisclosure requirement, and the proceeding would have to be concluded within a prescribed time, perhaps 60 days. In accordance with the first and second Freedman safeguards, the NSL could inform the recipient that the nondisclosure requirement would remain in effect during the entire interval of the recipient’s decision whether to contest the nondisclosure requirement, the Government’s prompt application to a court, and the court’s prompt adjudication on the merits. The NSL could also inform the recipient that the nondisclosure requirement would remain in effect if the recipient declines to give the Government notice of an intent to challenge the requirement or, upon a challenge, if the Government prevails in court.

Id. at 879 (citation omitted). The Mukasey court went on to assert that if the government were to voluntarily adopt this hypothetical procedure, the Second Circuit could then impose time limits on the process, including imposing time limits on district courts nationwide mandating when they must act. Id. at 883.

As its liberal use of the future conditional tense demonstrates, the Mukasey court's speculation was an impermissible advisory opinion, for there was no case or controversy before the Second Circuit regarding the hypothetical reciprocal-notice procedure, which the government at that point had never proposed, much less implemented. The Second Circuit erred in issuing this advisory opinion. A federal court's "role is neither to issue advisory opinions nor to declare rights in hypothetical cases, but to adjudicate live cases or controversies consistent with the powers granted the judiciary in Article III of the Constitution." Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Commission, 220 F.3d 1134, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc).

The district court properly rejected the authority relied upon by the Mukasey Court in its attempt to remedy the unconstitutionality it found in the NSL statute. United States v. Thirty–Seven (37) Photographs, for example (the primary authority relied upon by the Mukasey court but not discussed by the government here), involved a pre-Freedman statute for which there was extensive legislative history recognizing the need for and desirability of prompt judicial review of a prior restraint. This allowed the Court to conform the statutory language to the subsequently-articulated Freedman First Amendment requirements. 402 U.S. 363, 370 (1971). Here, by contrast, there is no evidence that Congress intended for NSL recipients to enjoy the protections mandated by Freedman. Indeed, the Mukasey court concluded that a limiting construction that would make the statute constitutional was impossible. Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 883. As the district court rightly found, “in amending and reenacting the statute as it did, Congress was concerned with giving the government the broadest powers possible to issue NSL nondisclosure orders and preclude searching judicial review of the same.” In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1080. Congress was fully aware of the mandates of the Freedman Court, articulated over 20 years before the NSL statute was first passed and over 40 years before the latest amendments to the statute were passed. The legislative history confirms what is clear on the statute’s face: Congress’ objective in enacting the NSL statute was to mandate access to information sought by law enforcement, not in any way to ensure that procedural checks were robust. See S. Rep. No. 99-307, at 3 (1986) (“[T]he Committee focused careful attention on the following major intelligence requirements: . . . The provision of timely and focused information in support of U.S. military operations and diplomacy worldwide.”). With neither statutory language nor legislative history upon which to base a limiting construction, the statute’s facial unconstitutionality is fatal.

Appellant is aware of no other instance where a court has found a statute unconstitutional and incapable of being saved by a limiting construction and yet has gone on to suggest that the government can continue to exercise the powers granted to it by the unconstitutional statute if it disregards the procedures Congress mandated in the statute and simply invents new ones. Indeed, for the Executive and the courts to combine to make an end run around the statute that Congress enacted, as has now occurred with the FBI's adoption of the Mukasey court's suggestion, raises grave separation of powers questions. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2688 (“[W]hen Congress has passed a statute and a President has signed it, it poses grave challenges to the separation of powers for the Executive at a particular moment to be able to nullify Congress’ enactment solely on its own initiative and without any determination from the [Supreme] Court.”). The Constitution does not permit the Executive and the courts to substitute different procedures for those that Congress enacted. The invented procedures suggested by the Mukasey court and subsequently adopted by the FBI are a usurpation of congressional authority over the NSL statutory scheme.¹⁰

The government argues nonetheless that the “reciprocal notice” procedure saves the statute from facial invalidity, because the procedure has been “accepted . . . and fully implemented” by the FBI and is therefore a “well-understood and uniformly applied practice. . . that has virtually the force of a judicial construction.” Gov. Brief at 53 (quoting City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ’g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 770 n.11 (1988)). However, the cases in which the Supreme Court has considered an established government practice as a limitation on a statute under facial attack do not support the government’s position.

¹⁰ Congress has explicitly considered amendments to the NSL statute to fix some of the Freedman deficiencies identified by the Second Circuit in Mukasey and later by the district court, but no amendments have thus far been passed into law. See, e.g., USA PATRIOT ACT Sunset Extension Act of 2011, S. 193, 112th Cong. (2011), available at <http://www.govtrack.us/congress/bills/112/s193/text> (last visited January 28, 2014) (Section 6(b): mandating a 30-day deadline by which the government must apply for a court order to enforce an NSL and gag and compelling a district court to “rule expeditiously” on such an application).

First, fundamentally, the “well-established practice” doctrine only applies where the statute is “fairly susceptible” to a narrowing construction. City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 770 & n.11 (citing Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205 (1975)). This is because the well-established practice simply functions as a narrowing construction. As the district court and the Mukasey court both held, the NSL statute is not susceptible to any such limiting construction. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1080.

Second, the “well-established practice” doctrine described in City of Lakewood applies to First Amendment challenges to state statutes. 486 U.S. at 770. For reasons of federalism, federal courts are bound by a state court’s authoritative construction of the statute. See Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494 n.5 (1982). By extension, federal courts defer to the practice of a state agency or municipal authority that is so “well-established” that it has attained “the force of a [state] judicial construction.” City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 770 n.11 (“the state law is read in light of” well-established practice) (emphasis added); see also, e.g., Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 131 (1992) (considering county’s “authoritative constructions of the [county] ordinance”); Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 795-96 (1989) (“federal court must . . . consider any limiting construction that a state court or enforcement agency has proffered.”) (internal quotations and citations omitted). The cases cited by the government, Hoye v. City of Oakland, 653 F.3d 835 (9th Cir. 2011) and Santa Monica Food Not Bombs v. Santa Monica, 450 F.3d 1022 (9th Cir. 2006), involve challenges to city ordinances. It points to no authority in which this doctrine has been applied to the allegedly well-established practice of a federal agency administering a federal statute as opposed a state or local law. See Arnold v. Morton, 529 F.2d 1101, 1104 (9th Cir. 1976) (stating that in regard to allegedly well-established practice of Secretary of the Interior, “[a]dministrative practice is no authority when that practice is contrary to law.”).

Third, the policy underlying these cases does not support reading the reciprocal-notice procedure as a narrowing construction on the NSL statute. In City of Lakewood, the Court explained that unless an administrative policy is so well-established as to be binding, reading it into a statute would require “the very presumption that the doctrine forbidding unbridled discretion disallows,” namely that an official entrusted with discretion will act according to constitutional requirements. 486 U.S. at 770 (citing Freedman); cf. Santa Monica, 450 F.3d at 1035 (finding that Administrative Instruction was adopted by the city and was “binding on the City’s enforcement staff” and “is therefore properly viewed as . . . [an] authoritative interpretation”).

In 13-15957, by contrast, the district court correctly found that the government’s commitment to reciprocal notice was “voluntary” and therefore “not sufficient to demonstrate the existence of . . . an agency’s ‘authoritative construction.’” In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1073. For this reason, even if the FBI had adopted reciprocal notice as a formal policy, “the fact that the statute is facially deficient . . . presents too great a risk of potential infringement of First Amendment rights to allow the FBI to side-step constitutional review” Id. at 1074. The government makes no argument to the contrary, pointing only to an FBI declaration indicating what the FBI has voluntarily “implemented” but to nothing that would legally bind its behavior. See Gov. Brief at 11; ER 30-33.

The Freedman deficiencies that remain with the FBI’s post-Mukasey NSL practices do not raise merely theoretical concerns. In both related cases now before this Court, the FBI did not commit to seeking judicial review and did not in fact file an affirmative request for judicial review until after Appellant had filed its own challenge to the statute. The Freedman requirement would be meaningless if it could be satisfied by the government’s rushing to court after a would-be-speaker had itself already done so, as happened here; one of the Supreme Court's explicit goals behind imposing the Freedman requirements was to counteract the self-censorship that occurs when would-be speakers are unwilling or unable to initiate judicial review themselves. Freedman, 380 U.S. at 59.

And indeed, the government's own behavior in this case gives lie to the government's assertion that its purported adoption of the Mukasey "reciprocal notice procedure guarantees prompt initiation of judicial review by the government." Gov. Brief at 53. After Appellant filed its petition challenging the legality of two separate NSLs, instead of moving forward with its "guarantee" to solicit court review for the NSL gag, the FBI withdrew one of the NSLs and filed an ex parte application for the information in the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2703(d). ER 11, 20-21. That the government may unilaterally impose a non-judicial gag on an NSL recipient that it need not justify before an Article III court until the recipient indicates that it should, and then withdraws the NSL before it must justify its behavior before that court, raises precisely the kinds of concerns about arbitrariness and chilling effects that the Freedman Court was concerned about. Here (and perhaps with other such NSL challenges that remain secret), the "orphan" gag—now detached from the underlying NSL request—remains in effect. Given the disincentives already in place in the NSL statute, the chances that an NSL gag would ever receive judicial review are already vanishingly small. The FBI's practice of issuing NSLs and then revoking them in some circumstances when they are actually contested plainly exacerbates the constitutional infirmities further. The "voluntary" nature of the NSL process—leaving all manner of discretion in the hands of the FBI—is precisely the problem.

II. THE STANDARDS OF JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE NONDISCLOSURE REQUIREMENT IN 18 U.S.C. § 3511(b) ARE EXCESSIVELY DEFERENTIAL AND VIOLATE SEPARATION OF POWERS AND DUE PROCESS.

Even if judicial review of the gags takes place, the district court rightly concluded that the applicable provisions of sections 3511(b)(2) and (3) fail to meet the requirements of the Constitution. Sections 3511(b)(2) and (3) prevent independent review and instead impose an extremely deferential standard of review. Specifically, the statute allows the court to dissolve the agency's gag order only if the court:

finds that there is no reason to believe that disclosure may endanger the national security of the United States, interfere with a criminal, counterterrorism, or counterintelligence investigation, interfere with diplomatic relations, or endanger the life or physical safety of any person.

18 U.S.C. §§ 3511(b)(2), (3) (emphasis added). The statute further requires that if any one of a long list of government officials so certifies, "such certification shall be treated as conclusive unless the court finds that the certification was made in bad faith." Id. The district court correctly observed that "the Court can only sustain nondisclosure based on a searching standard of review, a standard incompatible with the deference mandated by Sections 3511(b) and (c).” In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1077. The Second Circuit in Mukasey similarly rejected this deferential review standard, highlighting the separation of powers concerns: “The fiat of a governmental official, though senior in rank and doubtless honorable in the execution of official duties, cannot displace the judicial obligation to enforce constitutional requirements.” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 882-83.¹¹

As the Supreme Court has noted, “Deference to a legislative finding cannot limit judicial inquiry when First Amendment rights are at stake.” Landmark Communications v. Virginia, 435 U.S. 829, 843 (1978). Ultimately, here, by limiting the Court, the NSL statute “impermissibly threatens the institutional integrity of the Judicial Branch” in violation of separation of powers. Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 383 (1989) (quoting Commodity Futures Trading Com. v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833, 851 (1986)).

¹¹ The government argues for the first time on appeal that the district court impermissibly struck down the statute based on a legal standard not at issue here: the conclusiveness of an NSL certification submitted by a senior official. Gov. Brief at 59. Even if this argument could be raised for the first time here, the government ignores the excessive deference required as to its lowered certification standard. In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1078.

III. THE NSL STATUTE ALSO FAILS TO SATISFY THE SUBSTANTIVE REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIOR RESTRAINTS.

In addition to the procedural requirements of Freedman, a prior restraint must be justified on substantive grounds and will be invalid unless it survives the most exacting scrutiny. “Any prior restraint on expression comes to [a court] with a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity” and “carries a heavy burden of showing justification.” Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415, 419 (1971) (internal quotation marks omitted).

To pass constitutional muster, prior restraints must be necessary to further a governmental interest of the highest magnitude. See Neb. Press Ass’n, 427 U.S. at 562. The prior restraint will be necessary only if: (1) the harm to the governmental interest will definitely occur; (2) the harm will be irreparable; (3) no alternative exists for preventing the harm; and (4) the prior restraint will actually prevent the harm. See id.

This exacting scrutiny applies even if the asserted governmental interest is national security. In the Pentagon Papers case, New York Times v. United States, 403 U.S. 713 (1971), the Supreme Court, in a brief per curiam decision, found that the United States’ request for an injunction preventing the New York Times and Washington Post from publishing the contents of a classified study of U.S. policy towards Vietnam was an impermissible prior restraint; the government had not overcome the “heavy presumption” against the constitutionality of a prior restraint on speech and failed to carry its “heavy burden of showing justification for the imposition of such a restraint.” Id. at 714. Justice Stewart, joined by Justice White, faulted the government for not demonstrating that disclosure of the information will “surely result in direct, immediate, and irreparable damage to our Nation or its people.” 403 U.S. at 730 (Stewart, J. joined by White, J., concurring).

The gag order imposed on Appellant fails to meet this exacting scrutiny because the government did not need to prove that it is “necessary.” Nebraska Press, 427 U.S. at 562. Although Appellant is not privy to the specific facts presented in camera to the district court, the statute only required the government to show that the harm to national security “may” occur, whereas the prior restraint test requires that it “must” occur.

Nor did the statute require the government to prove that the harm caused by Appellant’s disclosure of the mere fact that it had received an NSL would be irreparable. Because the government has disputed that the prior restraint test applies at all and because the statute does not require it, it would be surprising if the government submitted evidence to satisfy the test. Lastly, the gag order of unlimited duration is highly unlikely to be the only alternative for preventing the harm to national security; a time-limited gag order is one obvious alternative.

IV. THE NONDISCLOSURE PROVISION VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT BECAUSE IT IS A CONTENT-BASED RESTRICTION ON SPEECH THAT FAILS STRICT SCRUTINY.

The district court in 13-15957 also correctly held that the statute is unconstitutional for the independent reason that section 2709(c) is a content-based restriction on speech that does not meet the requirements of strict scrutiny. See In re Nat'l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1075 (“as content-based restrictions on speech, the NSL nondisclosure provisions must be narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest.”). Indeed, while it does not do so here, the government has previously “conceded that strict scrutiny is the applicable standard” for a review of the nondisclosure provision, a concession adopted by the Second Circuit in its evaluation of the statute. Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 878.

Under the strict scrutiny standard, the gag order provision is “presumptively invalid.” R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 382 (1992) (“content-based regulations are presumptively invalid”). To survive strict scrutiny review, the government must show that a restriction on free speech is “narrowly tailored to promote a compelling Government interest.” United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc., 529 U.S. 803, 813 (2000). This narrow tailoring requires that the restriction on speech directly advance the governmental interest, that it be neither overinclusive nor underinclusive, and that there be no less speech-restrictive alternatives to advancing the governmental interest. Id.; see also Reno v. ACLU, 521 U.S. 844, 874 (1997).

As the district court held, the gag provision fails strict scrutiny. The provision is overinclusive because it impermissibly permits the FBI to gag recipients about not only the content of the NSL but also as “to the very fact of having received one.” In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1075. As the district court noted:

[T]he government has not shown that it is generally necessary to prohibit recipients from disclosing the mere fact of their receipt of NSLs. The statute does not distinguish—or allow the FBI to distinguish—between a prohibition on disclosing mere receipt of an NSL and disclosing the underlying contents. The statute contains a blanket prohibition: when the FBI provides the required certification, recipients cannot publicly disclose the receipt of an NSL.

Id. at 1076. The gag provision is also overinclusive in that it authorizes overly long prior restraints. Even if the Court decides that the prior restraint is justified in a particular case, it cannot tailor the duration of the prior restraint to the circumstances. As the district court held, “[b]y their structure . . . the review provisions are overbroad because they ensure that nondisclosure continues longer than necessary to serve the national security interests at stake.” Id.; see also Doe v. Gonzales, 500 F. Supp. 2d 379, 421 (S.D.N.Y. 2007)).

Moreover, there are obvious alternatives that would be equally effective in protecting the government’s national security interests. The gag order could be authorized only when the disclosure of the fact of the NSL would be reasonably likely to, as opposed to potentially, endanger national security.

The government does not argue that the statute satisfies strict scrutiny. Rather, it argues that strict scrutiny does not apply at all because the statute is content-neutral and thus subject only to intermediate scrutiny. Gov. Brief at 31. The government is incorrect. The statute aims to suppress speech of a specific content—the fact of the NSL—and it aims to suppress it precisely because it fears the communicative impact of that speech. See Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 412 (1989). “As a general rule, laws that by their terms distinguish favored speech from disfavored speech on the basis of the ideas or views expressed are content-based. By contrast, laws that confer benefits or impose burdens on speech without reference to the ideas or views expressed are in most instances content neutral.” Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 643 (1994) (citations omitted).

The government’s assertion that a statute may be content neutral “even when a statute in fact ‘refer[s] to the content of speech’” is of no import here. Gov. Brief at 31 (quoting Perry v. L.A. Police Dep’t, 121 F.3d 1365, 1369 (9th Cir. 1997)). To the extent the government’s assertion is true, it is limited to those situations where the government’s goal is unrelated to the suppression of the speech. Here, the very reason the government wants to gag NSL recipients is because it does not want the public to learn the information it seeks to suppress. There is no other reason for the gag.¹²

The government's assertion that "strict scrutiny does not always apply even when a statute regulates speech based on its effects" is also incorrect. Gov. Brief at 31-32. The cases relied on by the government did not find that the restrictions at issue were content neutral. Rather, they rejected strict scrutiny for entirely different reasons, reasons that are not present here.

In United States v. Aguilar, 515 U.S. 593 (1995), a federal judge was convicted of disclosing the existence of an expired wiretap order. It was the defendant's status as a judge who had voluntarily taken an oath of confidentiality that led the court to apply a less stringent scrutiny; the court affirmed that strict scrutiny would have applied if the government sought to restrict the speech of "unwilling members of the public" as Appellant is here. Id. at 606.

And in United States v. Fulbright, 105 F.3d 443, 452 (9th Cir. 1995), this Circuit evaluated a First Amendment overbreadth challenge to a law that punished the filing of "false" documents. The court declined to apply strict scrutiny only because it found that "no legitimate free speech interest is implicated." Id.

¹² Perry itself is inapposite. At issue in Perry was an ordinance that this Court reviewed under the standard for content-neutral speech restrictions because the original ordinance, as opposed to a later amendment, made "no reference to content." Perry, 121 F.3d at 1365.

V. THE NSL STATUTE FAILS TO SET FORTH “NARROW, OBJECTIVE, AND DEFINITE STANDARDS” GUIDING THE DISCRETION OF THE FBI.

Even apart from the foregoing limitations, the First Amendment generally requires that any governmental action that restrains speech be governed by “narrow, objective, and definite” standards; the absence of such standards raises the prospect that governmental officials can discriminate against disfavored viewpoints. Shuttlesworth, 394 U.S. at 149-50 (rejecting a local ordinance that allowed city officials to refuse a parade permit if “the public welfare, peace, safety, health, decency, good order, morals or convenience” so required). See also Forsyth County, 505 U.S. at 131 (“[I]f the permit scheme involves the appraisal of facts, the exercise of judgment, and the formation of an opinion by the licensing authority, the danger of censorship and of abridgment of our precious First Amendment freedoms is too great to be permitted.” (citations omitted)); Seattle Coal. Stop Police Brutality v. City of Seattle, 550 F.3d 788, 803 (9th Cir. 2008) (“The First Amendment prohibits placing such unfettered discretion in the hands of licensing officials . . .”).

Section 2709(c) allows the government to gag a recipient merely on a certification that disclosure “may result [in] a danger to the national security of the United States, interference with a criminal, counterterrorism, or counterintelligence investigation, interference with diplomatic relations, or danger to the life or physical safety of any person.” 18 U.S.C. § 2709(c) (emphasis added). This language leaves the decision entirely in the subjective judgment of the FBI official issuing the NSL and reserves no meaningful ability for a court to evaluate whether the official acted lawfully, regardless of any degree of deference that is appropriate. Without any articulable statutory guidance cabinning this executive discretion, allowing a gag to issue merely upon an official’s statement merely that harm may occur is insufficient to survive constitutional scrutiny.

VI. THE GAG ORDERS AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 2709(c) ARE MATERIALLY DIFFERENT FROM PERMISSIBLE GAG ORDERS ISSUED IN OTHER CONTEXTS.

Attempting to justify the NSL gag orders, the government asserts that they are analogous to gag orders issued in other contexts, such as in certain court proceedings and where government employees who have agreed to secrecy requirements are prohibited from disclosing certain information. See Gov. Brief at 35. But these analogies only highlight the constitutional flaws in the NSL nondisclosure requirement.

As the Mukasey court observed, section 2709(c) gag demands are significantly different from gags discussed by the government because they are “imposed at the demand of the Executive Branch under circumstances where secrecy might or might not be warranted, depending on the circumstances alleged to justify such secrecy.” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 877. Section 2709(c) also has different underlying policy rationales and contains no temporal limitation. Id.

As the government notes, the Supreme Court has approved gag orders, in the form of protective orders, which are imposed on those who obtain information through pretrial discovery. See, e.g., Seattle Times v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20 (1984). But as noted above, the 2709(c) gag orders prevent the NSL recipient from discussing circumstances that have been thrust upon it unwillingly. Mukasey, 548 F.3d at 877. In contrast, the protective order in Seattle Times addresses the particular concerns raised where a party to litigation, by its own efforts, seeks out and acquires information through civil discovery. The availability of that information is thus a product solely of “legislative grace.” Seattle Times, 467 U.S. at 21.

Nor are the gag orders attached to grand jury subpoenas analogous. As the Supreme Court has recognized, a grand jury witness can only be prevented from communicating information he learned “as a result of his participation in the proceedings of the grand jury.” Butterworth v. Smith, 494 U.S. 624, 632 (1990). But a grand jury witness could not be gagged from disclosing the fact of her subpoena or testimony. Id. at 636-37 (Scalia, J., concurring). See In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1072; Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 877. Moreover, the gag orders issued in the grand jury context originate from the court. See, e.g., United States v. Navarro-Vargas, 408 F.3d 1184, 1199 (9th Cir. 2005) (documenting the historical operation of the grand jury, noting that it is “an appendage of the court” and “subject to the supervision of a judge”). Unlike NSL gag orders, they are not unilaterally imposed by the Executive on its own authority.

Nor are nondisclosure agreements enforced against governmental employees analogous. The subjects of these gags voluntarily agreed to silence themselves, contractually waiving their First Amendment rights; their validity is wholly dependent on the voluntary agreement between the government and its employees. See Snapp v. United States, 444 U.S. 507, 511 (1980) (employment agreement constituted “special trust” between employee and government); McGehee v. Casey, 718 F.2d 1137, 1141 (D.C. Cir 1983) (secrecy agreement as condition of employment). See also In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1078; Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 877 (rejecting the analogy).

VII. THE UNCONSTITUTIONAL PORTIONS OF THE NSL STATUTE ARE NOT SEVERABLE.

Because sections 2709(c) and 3511(b) are unconstitutional, the Court should—as did the district court in 13-15957—invalidate the statutory scheme as a whole because these provisions are not severable. See In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1081. Severability “is essentially an inquiry into legislative intent.” Ayotte v. Planned Parenthood of Northern New England, 546 U.S. 320, 330 (2006) (question is whether “the legislature [would] have preferred what is left of its statute to no statute at all”). A court must strike down additional provisions of a statute in the face of the unconstitutionality of particular elements of it when “it is evident that the legislature would not have enacted those provisions which are within its power, independently of that which is not” Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 108 (1976) (citation omitted).

Here, there can be only one conclusion: the provisions are not severable. The legislative history is clear. The Senate Intelligence Committee in 1986, for example, noted that the new NSL gag authority would “ensure[]” that “no” recipient would “disclose to anyone” that it had received an NSL, and flatly that “[t]he effective conduct of FBI counterintelligence activities requires such non-disclosure.” S. Rep. 99-307, at 21 (1986). Not only did Congress enact the two sets of provisions together, in 2006 Congress amended the nondisclosure provisions in an attempt to save the NSL statute, leading to its present form, after the initial district court decisions in the Mukasey litigation held that the nondisclosure provisions were unconstitutional. See In re Nat’l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d at 1081; Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 866-68. Congress’ attempt to preserve the FBI’s ability to protect the secrecy of NSLs after multiple judicial invalidations makes its intent clear, especially when Congress did not include a severability clause. As the district court in 13-15957 observed:

The Court also finds that the unconstitutional nondisclosure provisions are not severable. There is ample evidence, in the manner in which the statutes were adopted and subsequently amended after their constitutionality was first rejected in Doe v. Ashcroft, 334 F. Supp. 2d 471 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) and Doe v. Gonzales, 386 F. Supp. 2d 66 (D. Conn. 2005), that Congress fully understood the issues at hand and the importance of the nondisclosure provisions. Moreover, it is hard to imagine how the substantive NSL provisions—which are important for national security purposes—could function if no recipient were required to abide by the nondisclosure provisions which have been issued in approximately 97% of the NSLs issued.

930 F. Supp. 2d at 1081.

Tellingly, this fact is borne out even by the government’s own declaration in this case. In his declaration, Assistant Director of the Joseph M. Demarest, Jr., indicated that only in “highly unusual” circumstances would the provisions not operate together:

By definition, the information sought through an NSL is relevant to an ongoing investigation of international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. Thus, only under highly unusual circumstances such as where the investigation is already overt is an NSL sought without invoking the nondisclosure provision. In the vast majority of cases, the investigation is classified and thus disclosure of receipt of an NSL and the information it seeks would seriously risk on of the statutory harms . . .

ER 29. That the government can offer no other context in which a gag would not accompany an NSL except where those “who understand the importance of nondisclosure in this context to preventing terrorism” may voluntary gag themselves shows the illusory nature of the government’s argument. Gov. Brief at 62. Indeed, the legislative history plainly indicates that Congress considered NSL authority to be distinct from the kind of informal agreement described by the government. See, e.g., S. Rep. 99-307, at 19 (1986) (“The new mandatory FBI [NSL] authority for counterintelligence access to records is in addition to, and leaves in place, existing non-mandatory arrangements for FBI access based on voluntary agreement of communications common carriers.”).

CONCLUSION

The district court’s judgment in No. 13-16732 should be reversed. For the foregoing reasons, the nondisclosure provision of NSL statute is unconstitutional because it fails to require the government to initiate judicial proceedings, because its judicial review standards are excessively deferential, and because it is a prior restraint that is not narrowly tailored. Because the nondisclosure and judicial review provisions are not severable from the rest of the statute, the NSL statute as a whole is invalid and should be struck down.

Dated: February 28, 2014

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Matthew Zimmerman

Matthew Zimmerman, Esq.

Cindy Cohn, Esq.

David Greene, Esq.

Lee Tien, Esq.

Kurt Opsahl, Esq.

Jennifer Lynch, Esq.

Nathan D. Cardozo, Esq.

Andrew Crocker, Esq.

ELECTRONIC FRONTIER

FOUNDATION

815 Eddy Street

San Francisco, CA 94109

Richard R. Wiebe, Esq.
LAW OFFICE OF RICHARD R. WIEBE
One California Street, Suite 900
San Francisco, CA 94111

Counsel for UNDER SEAL

STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

This case is related to the consolidated cases Under Seal v. Holder, Nos. 13-15957 and 13-16731 which involve the same legal issues but a different NSL recipient. This Court has ordered that No. 13-16732 be briefed separately from, but on the same briefing and oral argument schedule as, Nos. 13-15957 and 13-16731.

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH TYPE-VOLUME LIMITATION,
TYPEFACE REQUIREMENTS AND TYPE STYLE REQUIREMENTS
PURSUANT TO FED. R. APP. P. 32(a)(7)(C)

Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(7)(C), I certify as follows:

1. Appellant's Opening Brief complies with the type-volume limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(7)(B) because this brief contains 13,308 words, excluding the parts of the brief exempted by Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(7)(B)(iii); and

2. This brief complies with the typeface requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(5) and the type style requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(6) because this brief has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 2011 for Mac, the word processing system used to prepare the brief, in 14 point font in Times New Roman font.

Dated: February 28, 2014

By: /s/ Matthew Zimmerman
Matthew Zimmerman

Counsel for UNDER SEAL

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I electronically filed the foregoing with the Clerk of the Court for the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit by using the appellate CM/ECF system on February 28, 2014.

I certify that all participants in the case are registered CM/ECF users and that service will be accomplished by the appellate CM/ECF system.

Dated: February 28, 2014

By: /s/ Matthew Zimmerman
Matthew Zimmerman

Counsel for UNDER SEAL