

In EEOC v. The Guardian Insurance Co., the EEOC alleged that defendant discharged charging party, a female field representative, because of her sex. Defendant fired charging party for having signed a client with an outside insurance company but did not discharge similarly situated male employees who also had contracts with outside insurance companies. The case was resolved through an agreed order which provides for a payment of $103,000 in monetary relief to charging party.